The Gift Month.

December—the gift month! "Give; it is like God," says an old proverb. Christmas is a happy time because then the best feelings of the heart are elicited and allowed full play. What would otherwise be smothered down as suggestive of sentimentality, as unseemly, as indicative of a too dear dream, may venture forth in the good congeniality of the Christmas season and, quickly attaining unto beautiful gift-fulness, blossom out in good will, gladness, Christ-like kindliness, blessing and blessed.

It is well that there should be such a season. We are all kinder than we seem. Life as it comes to us with its imperative pressure of duty demands, its brain racking cares for the immediate future, its pitiful misunderstandings leading unto estrangements, coldness, forgetfulness—life, even as it is and ever must be unto us mortals, creates, as it were, an icy film over what is the kindliest and best in all our hearts.

Then comes the Christmas season, with its memories of other years, of better, happier hours, and the hand of a little child brushes away that ice film, and there rise up silently into our busy day those gentler, kindlier feelings which, though dormant, were not dead.

At home we are loved best; there, too, we love best. In the genial Christian home, as in no other place on earth, there are full meaning, full appreciation, full enjoyment of the God given gift, Christmas.

BEHOLD THE REDINGOTE.

A WINTER IDEAL.

Over a full skirt of deep purple broadcloth goes its redingote, which is modishly banded with black fox. Two interesting details are the slit pockets in the front skirt of the coat and the demi-belt fastened with two novelty buttons. With the chic little turban this makes a handsome outfit for the business woman.

A Popular Disease.

What American is there who has not been or is not going to be a president of something? Time was when the number of societies, clubs, organizations, chapters, associations, etc., was so limited that only about one in ten thousand could be a president. Now nobody, no matter how humble he is, can avoid the office.—Life.

Keen Scented Deer.

Under the most favorable atmospheric conditions deer can scent a man at the distance of a mile and a half. If he is smoking the range may be increased to two miles. They have been known to refuse to cross a man's track more than four hours after he had passed, but rain may destroy the scent in ten minutes.—St. James' Gazette.

A SHINING EXAMPLE.

A casual observation of the street paving in Breslau as well as of street repair operations reveals, among other evidences of systematic efficiency, the distinguishing characteristic that it is "put to stay," says Consul Harry G. Setzler, Breslau, Germany, in Commerce Reports. Torn up streets are such rare occurrences as to be events of noteworthy importance. This is all the more remarkable when the natural features of the city and its surroundings are considered.

WON BACK THE LOST HERITAGE

Young Cuthbert Woods, when he went to the city to go into business, was warned by his father against a false step in marriage, Mr. Woods, Sr., concluding: "If you marry a girl with less than $10,000 in her own right I'll disown you. If the girl you marry has that amount I will give you $10,000." Notwithstanding this warning, Cuthbert walked right into a match with a poor girl. The first thing he knew of what was happening after meeting Lucy Briggs was that he had been enthralled.

One morning the elder Woods received a letter from his son announcing his marriage with Miss Lucy Briggs. His father made no reply to the letter, but, after giving himself time to cool, wrote a friend in the city to make inquiries as to his son's wife and report. The friend wrote that Miss Briggs had been a social belle; but, her father having died insolvent, she had previous to her marriage been preparing to earn her own living. On receipt of this letter Mr. Woods wrote his son reminding him of the warning given and stated that the boy could in the future shift for himself, supporting an extravagantly brought up wife as best he could.

Now, young Mrs. Woods did not feel satisfied to have brought this trouble on her husband, but she did not sit down and mourn over it, nor did she do what some women would have done—charge her husband with being the cause of it. She went so far as to assume the whole blame herself, declaring that no girl had any right to make trouble between parents and children by a marriage which was not even announced to take place.

"Cuthbert," she said one spring morning a few years after their marriage, "I need a rest. This doing housework and taking care of two children is breaking me down. I think I'd better go to Aunt Deborah's this summer for a visit."

"Certainly, my dear."

Meanwhile Mr. Winslow Woods was finding life tedious. Being a widower with no child save Cuthbert, he had always looked forward to his son and his son's family living with him. This dream had failed to materialize on account of his son's folly. Mr. Winslow Woods was but fifty, and he would have married again, but he lived in a quiet place among quiet, prosaic women, not one of whom was in the slightest degree tempting to him. But when, one morning, a stranger, Miss Aylesworth, called on him and, after announcing her intention to open school in the place, asked him to countenance the project, he saw something different.

Miss Aylesworth did not seem fitted for a schoolma'am, but the moment Mr. Woods looked into her pretty face and noticed her engaging manners it occurred to him that she would be just the person to take the place he had intended for his son's wife. He kept her chatting over her proposed school for an hour, promising to support the enterprise not only with influence, but with money, and invited her to call every day till her plans were matured. At the end of two weeks he proposed to her, but she called his attention to the fact that he knew nothing about her and would not consent till he had made inquiries. When he told her of his son she declared that she would never marry the father without the son's consent. This broke off negotiations for a few days, but Mr. Wood had set his heart on Miss Aylesworth and finally consented as a preliminary move to send for his son and patch up a reconciliation. This accomplished, Miss Aylesworth would furnish her credentials.

One day Cuthbert Woods, who was toiling in the city, while his wife and babies were in the country, received a letter from his father to come to him. Cuthbert hopefully wrote his wife of the invitation and took the first train.

"Cuthbert," said Mr. Woods, Sr., "by your folly I have been prevented, as I always hoped, from having you and your wife with me in my old age. Fortune has given me an opportunity to break my loneliness. A young woman—rather young for me, I admit—is willing to marry me. At her request I am going to be reconciled to you. She has made no such request as to your wife, whom I still do not care to meet. I will, however, from the day of my marriage allow you $1,000 a year."

Half a loaf is better than none, and Cuthbert, for the sake of his wornout wife, yielded a dissatisfied consent.

"And now," said his father, "I wish you to meet the noble lady who has effected this reconciliation." He opened a door and announced, "Miss Aylesworth, my intended wife!"

To his surprise, his son stood for a moment struck dumb with astonishment, then took his father's intended wife to his arms. Then to his father he announced in his turn, "My wife!"

Mr. Woods, Sr., having a logical mind, concluded that if "Miss Aylesworth" was good enough to run his house as his wife she was good enough to run it as his son's wife. The lady had not spoken in the town of her matrimonial project, and her mouth was sealed by a $10,000 check. It was arranged that Mr. Woods, Sr., should live with his son's family in winter in the city, and his son's family should live with him in summer in the country.

Stylish Suit of Velvet

Designed by Franklin Simon & Co., New York.

THERE is no end to the wearing of velvets, and all dark shades of velvet and velveteen are used in the making of the most stylish suits and coats of the season. This dressy velveteen suit is trimmed with natural beaver fur and is made up in black, brown, green or navy. The long waisted coat has a flaring peplum and a deep belt of the material, and beaver ornaments trim the coat very effectively. The collar of beaver smothers the chin, and the coat fastens with oddly shaped bone buttons. The small tailored hat pictured is very jauntily trimmed with beaver. ANNA MAY.

One of the very fashionable coats of winter developed in gray chinchilla and having a deep belt, turn-back cuffs and large pockets.

With large pockets, deep turn-back cuffs and a wide belt to add to its attractiveness, this coat of gray chinchilla makes a charming addition to the junior wardrobe. The neck is finished with a notched collar and the sleeves are cut in one piece. A pleated back section adds novelty to the skirt, which is joined to the body at normal waist-line. In medium size the coat calls for 2¼ yards 54-inch material.

Very economical cutting is required to use the material to the best advantage. First fold the cloth carefully; then place directly on the fold, the skirt section, the back and the pocket. Between the skirt and the back, however, come the sleeve, the cuff and collar, while between the back and the belt comes the pocket.

Now, in the narrow strip of space opposite the skirt section place the underfacing, resting the pattern on a lengthwise thread of the goods. The front is laid to the right of the underfacing so that the shoulder rests over the cuff and the lower edge runs almost parallel with the belt.

The belt may be carried entirely around the waist or the front edges may be cut off on either side of the front panel, leaving the unbroken lines that is so much desired in modes of all kinds this season.

This coat is very pretty fashioned of broadcloth trimmed with fur or of gabardine trimmed with velvet. Combinations of materials are much favored for children's outer garments this year.

A Christmas Box

By EUNICE BLAKE

Jack Hollingsworth was to have been his uncle's heir until Jack married Julia Trevor without saying anything about it to the old man except to invite him to the wedding. After that it was understood that St. Luke's hospital would get the bulk of the property and Jack would have to get on as best he could. Since he had been brought up to expect a fortune, this was not a pleasant outlook.

A couple of months before the third Christmas after the marriage and a short time after their baby was born Jack and his wife were sitting together brooding over their poverty—for Jack was not a success as a worker—and lamenting that Jack had not at least mentioned the fact to his uncle that he was about to take a wife and asked the old man's approval. Mrs. Hollingsworth said she didn't blame the old man a bit. Jack admitted that he didn't blame him either.

"Let's send him a Christmas present," said Julia. "It may bring about a change."

"Where are we to get the money to pay for it?" suggested her husband.

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll make a batch of those iced top cookies I know so well how to make and send them to him in a box with a note saying I made them."

"Put in your photograph," said Jack.

This plan was not so bad, since Mr. Silas Henderson, Jack's uncle, believed in women who were practical and was very fond of children. Indeed, it was the sad spot in his life that his wife, now dead, had not borne him a son to bring up to manage his business and inherit his property.

Unfortunately for Julia's scheme, not long before Christmas Silas Henderson received a Black Hand letter demanding $5,000. He paid no attention to the demand except to hand it over to the police. On Christmas eve Jack, at Julia's suggestion, to save expressage, as soon as it was dark took the box of cookies to his uncle's house, put it down, rang the bell and slipped away. The summons was answered by the butler, who took up the box and carried it to his master, telling him how he had found it.

Mr. Henderson took it up, looked at the address—written by Julia—and, suddenly remembering his Black Hand letter, dropped it like a hot coal.

"Thomas, telephone for the police!" he cried to the butler.

The order was obeyed, and in a few minutes a patrol wagon dashed up to the house. A sergeant and a couple of men entered and asked what was the matter. The sergeant when informed of the receipt of a suspicious package sent the men back to the station and proceeded to examine what no one doubted was an infernal machine.

The first thing the sergeant did was to unloose the bit of narrow ribbon that Julia had used in tying it up and put it in his pocket as a possible clew. The next thing was to unwrap the paper about the box and hold it up to the light in hopes of seeing some mark on it by which to find the culprit. A box in which a set of child's ninepins had been kept next appeared.

"A sliding cover," remarked the sergeant sententiously. "We must find some way to remove the lid without drawing it out, for this is doubtless intended to produce friction and light an inflammable. Have you anything to bore with?"

A large sized gimlet was produced, and the sergeant bored a hole in the side of the box, drew out the gimlet and looked at a substance that adhered to it.

"Dynamite!" said the sergeant.

He put the gimlet to his nose, then to his tongue.

"Doesn't taste like dynamite. It's more like cake. I fancy, Mr. Henderson, you have made a mistake. This may be a Christmas box."

He bravely pulled out the cover, removed some paper and took up a card on which was written:

Beneath the card was a photograph of what looked to Mr. Henderson like a Madonna and child. Lifting another paper, a dozen round cakes with pink icing on the top were displayed. Mr. Henderson gave one to the sergeant and ate one himself. It was delicious.

"Thomas," said the receiver of the box, "call up my nephew, John Hollingsworth, on the phone and ask him if he and his family will dine with me tomorrow."

Thomas obeyed the order, and the next day the Hollingsworth family, including Silas Henderson Hollingsworth, aged two years, the child sitting in a high chair on his great-uncle's right, dined with Silas Henderson.

That was the first Christmas in many years that Silas Henderson had any one to dine with him on Christmas day. A fine dinner was provided, such as the Hollingsworths had not partaken of since their marriage. Mrs. Hollingsworth made herself especially agreeable, and little Billy was regarded by his great-uncle with delight.

"After all," said the old man, "blood is thicker than water. You, Jack, and you, Julia, and Billy will make my life much happier in the future, and it all came from a mess of cookies."

The next day Mr. Henderson changed his will in favor of his grandnephew, leaving the estate in trust to the boy's father.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE HUMBLE POTATO.

BERKSHIRE POTATOES.—Heat a quart of milk into which two large sliced onions have been placed. Boil this for several minutes in a double boiler; then take out the onions. Cream a tablespoonful of butter and a tablespoonful of flour and add to the mixture. Cook until it thickens. Add a pint of cold boiled potatoes cut in slices and a tablespoonful of minced parsley. Season with salt and pepper and as soon as the mixture thickens and is heated through turn into buttered crumbs and brown in the oven.

Potato Craters.—Season highly a dish of mashed potatoes and while still hot arrange it in small cones on a buttered pie plate, keeping it light and fluffy. Make a paste of a tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of cheese well seasoned with salt and paprika. With the handle of a wooden spoon make a hole in the top of each volcano and fill each crater with a generous lump of the cheese paste. Dust the outside well with grated cheese and brown for twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Stuffed Potatoes.—Wash large potatoes, put in oven and bake thirty-five minutes or until tender. Cut in half lengthwise. With silver fork remove the potatoes very carefully. To them add salt, pepper, chopped parsley, paprika and melted butter. Mix lightly with the fork; then return to the shells, which must not be broken. Put a few drops of milk on top and rough with fork. Place in oven until nice and brown.

Broiled Potatoes.—Broiled potatoes are a good substitute for fried potatoes. To make them boil potatoes, skin them and when they are cold slice them in quarter inch slices, cut lengthwise. Put the slices on a broiler and brown them gently on both sides. Season with salt and pepper, butter and minced parsley.

Scalloped Potatoes.—Slice potatoes and lay in the water half an hour. Place a layer of potatoes in a well buttered baking dish, sprinkle with pepper, salt and pieces of butter. Repeat the process until there is a sufficient quantity. Pour over this enough milk to cover and bake an hour and a half or until the potatoes are thoroughly cooked. If onions are liked with the potatoes alternate layers may be used.

Germans Massing Troops for Drive, Paris Believes

London—Germany plans to launch an offensive on the western front before the year is over. For the last two weeks there has been unusual activity along the transportation lines supplying the Kaiser's armies in Flanders and France. Five German corps at least arrived recently on the French front from Russia. And for the last eight days practically all the southern and western railways have been turned over to the movement of troops. Thousands of men have been poured into Eastern Belgium.

The decisive battle of the war will be fought on the western front, and Germany realizes it. Only two days ago news came from Berlin that the Great General Staff recognizes that the element of time now favors the enemy and that a final attack to beat the Allies ino peace must bem ade without delay. That assault, it is said, will be made on the western front. If it fails, an appeal will be made to neutrals to begin proceedings for a proclamation of peace.

While the troops areb eing shifted in large numbers to the western theater of war, the Krupps are working feverishly to supply the necessary big guns and material. For the Germans know now how effective are the French methods of attack—the preparation by a prolonged bombardment, followed by a powerful infantry assault—the methods which broke the German lines in Champagne and in Artois last September.

This attack in Champagne may be an attempt to draw Allied forces from the Artois front, where the real offensive is planned. Heavy artillery actions are taking place in Belgium and the Northern France sector, foreshadowing, it is possible, vigorous infantry action. The Belgians are making preparations to resist a new German attack.

She Is Lady Eglantine and the Champion Egg Layer of the World.

New York—It took twenty-one strong men as a bodyguard and a special Pullman to convey Lady Eglantine, thew orld's champion egg layer, from Philadelphia to New York.

Catharine de Medici in her balmiest days could not have had more fuss made over her. But it must be remembered that Catharine was a mere queen. Lady Eglantine is the $100,000 hen.

Her ladyship won her laurels in October. At the "North American" egg-laying contest, held by the agricultural department of Delaware Collefge at Newark, Del., the little white Leghorn laid 314 eggs in the twelve months from November 1, 1914, to October 31, 1915.

Her modesty is astonishing. Through her interpreter, Cromwell Childe—for the championette speaks Leghorn with a bad Peter Pan accent—she told a reporter the story of her life.

"I was born April 15, 1914. My birth presaged nothing of thef ame that was to be mine. My foster mother was kind to me—shew as the nicest incubator I have ever met. I miss her yet, though my maid Frank Vatikian showers me with attention and has never let me have a ill moment.

"Yes, they say my eggs are worth $720 a dozen. I presented Miss Kitty Gordon with one, suitbly niscribed, when we met. She held me, you know, when I made my mark on the Hotel Imperial register. I am sorry not to have met Mayor Mitchell, Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia promised to see me off, but he was detained.

"No, I can't lay a single egg for a long time. I am moulting, you know," with a feathery blush. "Some of my feathers came out when I autographed. If I have 100,000 feathers, each feather is worth about a dollar. And just think, I weigh only three and seven-eighths pounds, so I am worth more than 25,000 times my weight in gold.

Lady Eglantine told of her appetite. "I eat more than most of my associates—50 per sent. more than ordinary hens. I like a cereal of whole and cracked grain. called scratched food; then, a ground grain mash for an entree; ground oyster shells or brick for the piece de resistance, followed by a charcoal chaser and a desert of all sorts of green stuff."

With the explanation that she was named for a little wild rose that is plentiful in Maryland—the eglantine—her ladyship closed the interview. A frt earest of an hour and a half in her special wire-walled boudoir in the center of the lobby of the Imperial, the famous hen was taken to the second floor of Grand Central Palace. From this position of prominence she surveyed thel esser aristocrats of poultrydom which are being shown. Here she saw more than five thousand birds and animals. There are 2,750 fowls, 1,078 pigeons, 483 pet livestock, 332 song birds and 200 cats.

War Upon Pain!

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wonderful.

Mervin H. Soister, Berkeley, Cal. writes: "Last Saturday, after tramping around the Panama Exposition with wet feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I couldn't turn, I applied Sloan's Liniment freely and went to bed. To my surprise, next morning the stiffness had almost disappeared, four hours after the second application I was as good as new." March, 1915. At Druggists, 25c.

Secretary Hollenga Fires First Gun in Campaign to Get Fulton Speeded Up to Ninety Miles an Hour. Big Crowd Listens Intently to Man Who Came 2000 Miles to Deliver His Message

Cooperation Will Place Fulton Among Leading Cities of State, One of the Speaker's Declarations. It Was Plain Talk From a Man of and For the People

Billy Sunday may have a copyright on the correct way to put "Auld Hornie" to flight, but Secretary Hollenga's recipe for taking the kinks out of a mismanaged community, as outlined in his talk before the Chamber of Chamber mass meeting last night, was a revelation.

The auditorium at city hall was well filled with men and women who had responded to the invitation to welcome Mr. Hollenga. As [illegible] of coffee in the air gave at once a festive touch to the occasion. Expectancy stood on tip toe. Every one felt interesting things were going to happen. The conclusion was correct, for from the start to the finish of the program every one's attention was closely held.

The president of the Chamber, Mr. N. L. Whitaker, in opening the meeting introduced Mayor Fox, who was followed by the speaker of the evening, Secretary Hollenga. In well chosen phrases Mr. Hollenga at once stepped briskly in his topic—the relation of the Chamber to the public, and the citizen's duty to the chamber.

Where an Organization Stands

In beginning, the speaker announced that whatever traces of the "wind-jammer" might be found in his expression he would to all purpose stand upon a principle—the principle upon which is founded every successful movement. This remark was followed with the announcement that the Commercial organization of a town holds exactly the same relation as exists between an individual who is ill and the source of the cure he searches for. If a community has ills it must needs go to its head of intelligence, its commercial organization, which alone can efficiently diognose the case. Primarily, in a movement for civic betterment, the individual joins the commercial organization, but his responsibility is not met by simply paying his dues or the dues of a dozen others. The successful working of such an organization, Mr. Hollenga noted, can only come through individual responsibility, and the application of the watchword of modern civilization—co-operation. He added further, that while organzations are subject to mistakes, the same as individuals, it is but a sign that that body is active; one who does nothing never makes mistakes. The whole trouble, however, lies in the fact that when mistakes are made egotism forbids acknowledging them as such.

Loyalty to one's home town was the next point touched on by the speaker. The person who speaks of his city as a "rotten town" wasd isposed of verbally in such an able manner that laughter and applause marked the approval. The silliness of such methods in its result upon the knocker himself were vividly described. Abruptly the question was asked "who paves your streets, lights your city, pays your taxes and makes improvements; are the people in Syracuse doing it-" Here a rough estimate, based upon observation, placed the daily loss of Fulton through Syracuse shopping at a low figure—that of at least $250. Those in the audience were asked to stop for a moment and consider what that meant to this city. Regarding the advertising done in Syracuse newspapers by Fulton merchants Mr. Hollenga expressed himself as "surprised"—stating it was unusual, unnecessary and entirely out of order. Attention was drawn to the fact that statistics prove every dollar spent in the home town returns to the spender.

Sees Lack of Appreciation

In line with this point the question was asked, "Are you eating Peters Chocolate or Huyler's Chocolates; have you ever thought why you should choose Peters." The individual may think his nickle doesn't make much difference but it is there the great mistake is made. As to the necessity of being able to represent one's town intelligently, its importance was made clear. "The secret of the well filled granaries of Egypt lay in the fact that the old Egyptian kings proclaimed abroad the fertility of the Nile valley," said Mr. Hollega, and followed with thep ositive statement, "You can make of this city one of the greatest in the land, but the spirit of willingness must dominate your being. It is your duty as a citizen to let the nation know what you as a city can do."

The city of Fulton the speaker said now has nineteen manufacturing plants. [illegible] that they cannot be picked from trees. We can get more, Mr. Hol-

ONE HUNDRED FIFTY LOCAL GUN WORKERS HIRED TO WORK NEAR QUAKER CITY

One hundred and fifty gunworkers will be hired to work permanently from the Remington Arms company of Delaware and these men will leave Fulton this week and next, according to B. H. Briggs, representatives of the company who arrived here Tuesday morning and will remain until Sunday.

About thirty men leave today for Philadelphia, Pa., which is close to the immense new plant of the arms company at noon today Mr. Briggs had signed with sixty-four men to go to work for his company and he has been kept busy since his arrival here receiving applicants. A steady flow of men has been calling and nearly all of them have been accepted by him.

A strict questioning is resorted to by Mr. Briggs. The applicant must answer as to place of birth, language, previous places of employment, etc. A few men have been rejected for not meeting the requirements called for on the application blank.

"The plant where these men are going to is located 13 miles out of Philadelphia," Mr. Briggs, stated. It covers twenty-three acres of ground and it is said to be the largest factory in the world under one roof. It is three stories high.

"5,000 finished rifles a day will be the output of the factory when it is in full swing." continues Mr. Briggs, "and at the present time we have room for 22,000 more employes."

Mr. Briggs is a former resident of this city. He worked in the Hunter plant for seven years and left this city in 1901. Since that time he was employed for six years in a United States Government arsenal and he has been superintendent of one of the Sears-Roebuck plants.

He has made three visits to this city since last August, each time securing employment for a number of local gunworkers at his factory.

Germans Crushing the French in the West, Taking More Than 500 Yds. of Trenches—Italians Meeting Austrians in Counter Attacks—British Sending Reinforcements

London—The Balkan situation is developing rapidly. The Germans and Bulgarians have reached Kenali, on the Greek border, ten miles south of Monastir, thus threatening to outflank the Anglo-French forces, while Bulgarians, who who are supposed to be supported by Germans, have attacked the Allies' extreme right wing near Strumitza.

Under this pressure the French have withdrawn from the Kri- [illegible] pou in a deep gorge about twenty miles from the Greek frontier, through which the Saloniki railway runs. Here they were attacked by the Bulgarians, who, according to the French reports, were repulsed.

The plans of neither the Allies nor the Germans are yet quite clear, but apparently the Germans are determined on crushing the small number of troops which went to the assistance of the Serbians and which had been and is still being reinforced.

Not Likely to Quit Balkans

The retirement by the Allies to Demirkapou has led to the report that they intended to abandon the Balkan enterprise entirely, but the continued landing of troops at Saloniki would seem to deny anny such intention, while there is a very strong military opinion here that Saloniki should be held as a base for future operations in the near east.

There is little news from the other fronts. The Germans have scored a minor success in Champagne, where they captured about 500 yards of a French trench, part of which, however, has been regained; the British have received reinforcements at Kut-El-Amara, where they are making their stand after the retreat from Ctesiphon; and the Italians, who for the past two weeks have been on the offensive, are now engaged in meeting the Austrian counter attacks.

The expected offensive by the Allies in Gallipoli apparently did not materialize, while throughout Russia the wintry weather has put a stop to all but small ventures.

The official Austrian announcement of yesterday to the effect that the French submarine Fresnel had been destroyed and that six steamships, six large sailing vessels and several small craft had been sunk in the lower Adriatic while conveying war materials to the Albanian coast elicited the following official statement here today:

Austrian Statement Answered

"The British admiralty, referring to the German wireless message of December 7, state that the following has been received from Rome: Two small steamers were sunk, one of which was of 390 tons, and also a few small sailing vessels. Information as to the guns placed on land must be regarded as doubtful. (The Austrian announcement said the warships were bombarded from land.)

"The French submarine Fresnel was attacked while aground.

"The latest Austrian bulletin speaks of a very big sailing ship sunk on the 23d ultimo. This ship was the Callinara, 300 tons."

British reinforcements ordered to Mesopotamia before the advance to Ctesiphon, near Bagdad, began, already are arriving at the front, J. Austin Chamberlain, secretary for India, informed inquiring members of the House of Commons today.

Beyond this and the statement that the casualties at Ctesiphon and vicinity totalled 643 killed, 3,330 wounded and 594 not yet accounted for, to which has to be added losses of 300 during the retreat, he declined further information of the operations.

Mr. Chamberlain expressed admiration for the fine qualities shown by both British and Indian troops before superior forces.

OPEN AIR SCHOOLS AND RED CROSS SEALS

Institutions Where Children are Treated and Taught at Same Time

"Say, teacher, how sick's a feller got ter be ter get in this 'ere open air school?" This was a greeting to one of the teachers at the Elizabeth McCormick Open Air School in Chicago the other day by a puny little fellow who had been envying the sick kiddies the good time they were having at studying, working, sleeping and playing all in the open air.

Open air schools to the number of nearly 500 are now maintained all over the United States. Some of them this winter in the northern states will hold sessions when the thermometer is down to zero or below. Others will enjoy the balmy winds of Southern California, Louisiana or Alabama. The open air school idea is confined mainly to these children who have tuberculosis or who are run down, anaemic and likely to contract the disease.

In the open air school movement Red Cross Seals have played and are still playing an important part. The seal money, through the Anti-Tuberculosis societies, has been the means for experimenting and convincing the hard-headed school boards of the wisdom of the plan and also for providing food, clothing and special nursing care which the public funds could not furnish. Red Cross Seals are among the children's truest friends.

Opinions

HELPED BY HIS ENEMIES

The Ossining justice of the peace who insulted Warden Osborne of Sing Sing and drove him from the witness stand overdid it. He made friends for the warden and he helped to prove the charge of the warden that the Westchester politicians are his main opponents. The warden is fortunate in his enemies. They bound up every little while with excesses which prevent an open-minded scrutiny of the warden's excesses. As long as the public regards the issue as Osborne and his mistakes against the old gang and his abuses Osborne is sure of his place. He would have put himself out long ago if his enemies had not created sentiment for him.—Watertown Standard.

HEARTS YOUNG AND TRUE

The most notable journey of the Liberty Bell is now ended. Traversing the continent for exhibition at San Francisco, it has been seen in regions which on July 4, 1876, were unknown to the colonists on this coast and were only dimly mapped as possessions of Spain and France. Everywhere it has been received with honor by the magistrates and people of great commonwealths which when it gave its message to the world were wildernesses.

Nothing connected with these ceremonies, however, has been more impressive than the affectionate interest shown in the ancient relics by Young America. In scores of towns where brief stops were made, practically the entire juvenile population extended a welcome. No hour of day or night was too early or too late for the enthusiastic throngs, and in several of thel arger cities tens of thousands of school children marched past shouting their tributes to liberty.

A country capable of such demonstrations is not so forgetful of its ideals as cynics and doubters sometimes fear. The hearts of youth at least are true.—N. Y. World.

HAPPINESS

It is said that one advertisement writer employed by a Chicago agency receives $1,000 a week. Others may receive more, but talk among the men who know has not given enough publicity to the fact to make it well known.

Many people when told of this large salary say: "Well, I don't see anything in ads that's worth that. Why don't they write straight prose, poetry or something like that, if they are so clever."

And the answer is that sometimes these high-salaried copy writers do. The recipe for happiness which follows was clipped from an advertisement which appeared recently in several newspapers:

"Happiness goes out from the heart before it comes in. It never by any chance stays at home. You can harvest it for the common good, but you cannot store it for your sole individual use. You can lend it but you cannot borrow it, you can earn it but you cannot buy it, you can spend it but you cannot accumulate it. A man must contribute to the stock of human joys before he can participate in its profits. To seek happiness without giving it is a futile quest, and all our longings for what we have not learned to give to others are as empty bottles in the wine cellar of the soul. Happiness really never was any good in this world but to give away!"—Batavia News.

THE COMMUNITY CHRISTMAS TREE

It would be difficult to over-emphasize the importance of the projected community or municipal Christmas tree, as planned by the Chamber of Commerce, aided by the Electric company. It is hoped the two organizations may get real busy providing for the tree, and the gifts and the music which will make the town ring with the real Christmas spirit. Whoever takes part in the enterprise is entitled to receive commendation from the entire city, but more especially from the hundreds of Fulton's residents who know very little about the real Christmas spirit.

It is not an unusual occurrence to learn of towns making points about their attractive features, whatever these may be, Sometimes they are transportation facilities, water supply, climate, low taxes, good schools, plenty of churches—in fact, hundreds of advantages are listed to make towns appear in the best possible light. Yet how very surprising it is that in all such advertising so little attention is paid to building up the community spirit—the habit of co-operation. This essentiality can be developed through practice alone. The proper ideals must be developed, and it might be said here that nothing is more helpful than such an enterprise as the Chamber of Commerce and the Electric company have undertaken.

True, the Christmas tree means work for somebody and financial outlay for some of our citizens and the Electric company—but it means pleasure for many.

Here is where the workers get their reward, and yet not quite so, for they ought to bem ade to feel that they have strengthened the loyalty and the enthusiasm of the people of Fulton.

May the municipal Christmas tree here be a huge success, and may the workers for it realize more joy than their cups will hold, and may the city have more of the spirit which prompts the undertaking.

ASTRONOMY AND SCIENCE

Astronomy and science are centering on the belief that the sun's heat and light are electrical effects. It has been conceded that the sun's bulk is slowly contracting, and that the energy thus produced is turned into heat and light.

Stand on the hill some dark night, and look down into the valley, on a city, and see its electric lights—stars beneath you. Then look into the heavens and compare them with the stars above you. Your observations will prove light of the identical nature—the white, pure light. The only difference is distance and magnitude.

And after all, is this the solution of the solar system—of light and heat? Has man in his miniature mind, grasped the Creator's idea of light?

A light that will end its illumination millions of miles—miles that are measured by a "light-year" is without doubt the light that was intended for man to use.

And how few of us realize the stupendous, inconceivable, incomparable value of light and heat. Without light and heat, men would slip back into the ooze of old ocean—into the Paleozoic era. With proper light, the twenty-four hours of the day are converted to commerce and to pleasure. Strike out light—abandon the convenience of touching a button—go back to the old days—the torch, the candle, the kerosene lamp, and you can more fully appreciate the points made here.

Now connect up in your mind this pure, white light—this always-ready light, with the thought that, back of this light is a current—a poweer, that sends on the wheels of commerce in your city. Back of this light is a touch of the Creator's flams, that silently sends the heat into the iron, into the little stove—that does the dozens of things to lighten the burden of a home. And all done economically—all done cheap and clean.—The Silent Parther.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—When Woodrow Wilson was a candidate for the nomination for the Presidency his publicity bureau sent out an article which began: "One of the traits which shines forth most conspicuously in the make up of Woodrow Wilson is his marvelous felicity in phrasing." And his record in the White House has demonstrated the truth of the declaration. He finds it just as easy to form phrases on one side of a question as on the other. He can phrase for free tolls or against them. He has a great facility in constructing phrases for preparedness as against it. He phrased the sugar tariff out of existenced and will doubtless phrase it in again. His phrasing in support of extravagant appropriations was as "felicitous" as his phrasing for economy. His phrasing in aid of the spoils system is perhaps a little more effective than his phrasing for Civil Service reform but the difference is due entirely to the official power his words carry now as compared with the days when he posed as a friend of the merit system. When American business men complained of the dull times that came with the Underwood tariff, The President merely coined a few phrases—a process as easy as making fiat money. He refused to voice phrases for the G. A. R. at the Arlington memorial exercises but uttered them with great felicity when Champ Clark accepted the invitation. The murder of American citizens on the high seas and in Mexico was an occasion for phrasing at the White House—nothing more. The "dopester" of the Wilson campaign was certainly right—"marvelous felicity of phrasing" is one of his most conspicuous traits. In fact, it puts all other traits into almost total eclipse.

There isn't a more level-headed, conservative or intelligent class of people than the American farmers. They don't stampede. They are not panicky. They read extensively and think carefully. This is because they are engaged in a pursuit that brings them close to nature, keeps their minds free from prejudice and gives them abundant opportunity to think for themselves. They know that soon after the beginning of the European war there was an enormous increase in the demand for all kinds of grain, cattle, and other provisions, as well as for horses. They know that this demand sent prices soaring. As a result of this increased demand they were assured of a larger market in 1915 and they put in larger areas of crops. Statistics gathered by the Department of Agriculture show that this increase of acreage was about 7 per cent. This first year o fthe war resulted in an increase of 32 per cent in the value of farm products. This has brought prosperity to the American farmer. He knows the facts and the causes. The efforts of the Democratic press to create the impression that this agricultural prosperity is a normal condition might deceive some people but itw on't mislead the man who follows the plow. That man does his own thinking.

O'HARA'S SONGS WRITTEN FOR HIS NEW PLAY

A theatrical season in this city would be incomplete without a visit from Fiske O'Hara, the delightful Irish actor-singer, whose annual visits are eagerly anticipated by local play-goers. This year Mr. O'Hara is appearing as Richard Desmond in a new play. "Kilkenny," written by Augustus Piton, sr. The comedy gives Mr. O'Hara ample opportunity for the display of his acting ability, and his sweet tenor voice will be heard in a budget of new songs especially written for this play.

HOUSEKEEPERS WOULD BE FAIR TO GROCERS

Auburn—The Housekeeper's Club met yesterday afternoon in the parlors of the Woman's Union. The routine business and the Round Table talk was disposed of before the program. The most important discussion was over the question of covering foods at the numerous "sales" which are usually held in stores. The club members agreed that, to be consistent, they should ask that the food at such sales should be covered, if grocers and bakers are expected to cover their food stuff.

General Dissatisfaction.

Tiny Elsbeth was taken by mother to an afternoon tea, fashionable, but where the various ladies present were well acquainted and indulged too freely in gossip. The little girlie sat very straight and still, listening to all that was said. Critical remarks were made about absent friends, and even guests who took their departure were discussed with some freedom.

Elsbeth edged closer to her mother and remarked in a solemn whisper:

"Nobody seems jes' exactly satisfied with anybody, does they, mamma?"

Four Kinds of People.

There are four kinds of people:

(a) Those who are grouchy at home and pleasant everywhere else.

(b) Those who are pleasant at home and grouchy everywhere else.

(c) Those who are pleasant both at home and elsewhere.

(d) Those who are grouchy everywhere.

Class (b) are rare.

Class (c) are rarer.

Class (d) are public and private nuisances.—Strickland Gillilan, in Judge.

The Main Point.

"I am glad to say that I bear no man a grudge."

"But the point is this: Are you of sufficient importance to make any man care whether you bear him a grudge or not?"—Chicago Herald.

Kept a Minute Record.

Minneapolis, Minn. — When Elmer Norton was arrested for begging a charge of vagrancy was placed against him by Detective T. J Kelly. The detective searched the one legged man and found a little book bound in red leather in Norton's pocket, which showed that he not only kept a minute record of every mile traveled, every cent spent for transportation and every person who donated to him, but that he also kept other records the meaning of which the police can only hazard a guess.

PLANNING WHEN A CITY IS SMALL

A Matter of Vital Concern For All Municipalities.

LACK OF CIVIC IMAGINATION

The Villages of Today Will Become the Big Cities of the Future, and They Can Be Planned Best While Still Small.

By FRANK KOESTER.
[Author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance."]

Ordinarily city planning is regarded as being an activity for large cities alone, but it is just as important for the small city, if not more so, and engaging more completely the attention of all the citizens it becomes for the small city an even more vital concern.

The chief thing that prevents cities from being properly planned is lack of civic imagination. The citizens of a small town seldom act as though they expected their town to become a large city. They may individually at times dream of a great city spreading out around the nucleus in which they live, and they very frequently boast of the progress of the town during the previous decade, but the time when their town is to be a great city seems so far distant that as a whole they do not imagine that it will ever occur. The few enthusiastic souls who individually believe it are patronized or laughed at, and the citizens as a body do not have the assurance to walk out into unoccupied fields and lay out sites for streets, parks and public structures which may not come into existence until a century later, if ever.

Time quickly slips by, and the sites for great improvements which once might have been laid out and reserved become impossible to secure save at enormous expense. It thus happens that many cities have plans originally determined by the fancy of the homewardly meandering cow, and great volumes of traffic must indefinitely follow the paths thus marked out unless expensive changes be made.

America is bound to grow vastly in the next century, and many villages of today will become big cities of the future. Yet few, if any, of such towns have plans as yet laid out, and many a patient cow is still contributing her humble share to the city planning of the future, while worthy citizens are less usefully employed.

The expense of preparing a plan for a city while the city is still small is so insignificant compared with the benefits to be derived that it should not enter into consideration. The cost of such a plan is the best possible investment that a city can make not only in the saving of future expense, but for its psychological value, for when the future of a city is planned that of itself supplies an incentive to growth, as there is something definite to be accomplished, and the town is more likely to increase in size and importance through having such a plan than where its growth is purely haphazard. At the same time its enterprising citizens are more likely to remain and help build up the town than to go to larger cities, while, besides retaining its own population, it draws from less enterprising cities, and its growth is accordingly still further stimulated.

The small town should begin at an early period to accustom itself to proper regulations of different kinds. Only by suitable regulation may the plans, once adopted, be carried out.

It has sometimes happened in America that towns have been laid out along certain lines, but have grown off at one side in a manner not intended by their designers. Such towns are often cited as examples of the futility of attempting to forecast the future of civic developments. The absurdity of laying out a plan and then expecting a city to develop along such lines of its own accord, and when it does not the added absurdity of pointing out its failure to do so as an argument against city planning, are an adding of insult to injury. It would be as sensible to erect a grape arbor and expect the vines to train themselves without ties as to expect a city to follow its plan without the ties of suitable regulations. Indeed, such regulations are an absolute necessity in training a city's growth, and coincidently with the laying out of its plans the regulations which are to carry it into effect should be formulated and put into operation. Proper provision should, of course, be made for such modifications of the original plan as may be required by future conditions impossible to forecast, while at the same time not permitting private interests to block the carrying out of the plan for merely selfish ends.

City Planning In Colleges.

"In England, France and especially in Germany every large university offers a course in city planning which is attended by several hundred students," says Professor L. S. Smith of the University of Wisconsin. "If American students became as interested in the improvement of their cities it would not be long before the cities of this country were far in advance of the beautiful cities of Europe, because American energy is so tremendous."

At present only three or four American universities offer courses in city planning. Harvard, Columbia and Wisconsin are the leaders in this work.

Fish Culture.

The United States does more to stock its inland waters with edible fish than any other nation.

TELLS OF APPROACHING CARS

Electric Signal Warns Motorists and Pedestrians to Watch Out for Possible Danger.

In order to warn motorists and others of the approach of traction cars at an intersection of two narrow streets where the view is obstructed by buildings, fences, and trees, an electric signal of rather novel appearance has been put in use. At the top of an iron post, which also carries the street signs, is mounted a propeller-shaped member which oscillates whenever a car nears the crossing. At night a sign beneath this signal arm bearing the word "Danger" is illuminated in red.—Popular Mechanics.

Beauty Spot.

A gentleman from Michigan once visiting in California, says that in one town he visited there was a deep ravine running through the town, into which, seemingly, all the rubbish of the town was thrown.

A young schoolteacher devised a plan by which this might be remedied. Her pupils were all requested to bring all the nasturtium seeds they could get, and when the rainy season commenced they went down into the ravine and all up and down its sides they planted their nasturtium seeds. The gentleman said they were in blossom when he was there and that it was the prettiest sight he saw in all California.

PREDICTS DEMAND FOR U. S. LUMBER

China Almost Without Timber; Fair Treatment Needed.

EXPLOITATION DAY PASSED.

Federal Expert Declares Better Methods Must Be Employed in Dealing With Chinese—Can't Be Fooled Twice—Says United States Ought to Control Lumber Trade.

Washington.—In a report just made public Franklin H. Smith, commercial agent of the department of commerce, predicts a large increase in the demand for American lumber and forest products in China. At the same time he points out existing difficulties and the shortcomings of marketing methods now in vogue and makes suggestions for bettering them.

"China," he says, "is almost without timber today, and reforestation has not yet been attempted. Reforestation, even if practiced upon a huge scale, would not put China's timber on a basis to equal consumption for approximately sixty to eighty years or more. Its population is slowly shaking off the old order of existence and turning toward the new—toward greater agricultural and industrial activity, absorbing new ideas and adopting new methods. With increasing development along many lines and with the extension of the railroads, with their civilizing and their trade creating effects, there must of necessity come a larger, wider call for lumber. The United States, with its durable, easily worked and comparatively cheap timber, will, with proper precautions, control this trade.

"It may be well to emphasize the fact that the Chinese want just treatment; the day of exploitation has about passed. But because of long continued exploitation the Chinese are a bit chary about placing an order for material of which they have not detailed knowledge. This is true of lumber. Chinese have been known to accept shipments of materials of various kinds, including lumber, that were not up to specification or grade, though all efforts to get them to do business again with the concern forcing the sale are fruitless.

"A standard list price, so far as China is concerned, would result in as much business being obtained as with endless cutting. As a matter of fact, fluctuating prices have hurt rather than helped in getting Chinese orders. While the Chinese are good and keen traders, they are more content to have a fixed price for a standard article, such as lumber, where the margin of profit is not great.

"Too much grade manipulation in Oregon has been done in China shipments, and this has in a measure created a feeling of distrust toward the manufacturer, since the producer is the one on whom the blame is placed for all shortcomings. A standard China grade, from which no departure should be permitted by the manufacturers, is needed if confidence is to be held. Some of the Chinese buyers have become skeptical of the ability of the shippers to furnish cargoes of the same general quality—a situation which has arisen through the making of a grade to fit the price and the acquiescence of the mill or mills in the practice.

"With respect to selling lumber in China, no serious attempt is made to explain the excellent qualities for every purpose of woods from the United States. Engineers connected with the railways admitted in several instances that they knew nothing about the value of American woods for ties. No conclusive data had ever reached them as to durability, mechanical life, resistance to decay under varying conditions, cost and desirability of various processes of preservative treatment. Municipal governments have not been shown the value of wood block paving. Architects know positively nothing of the superiority of American factory made doors, sash, blinds, columns and finish.

"The problem of exchange is a vexatious one to the lumberman doing business in China, or with the Chinese. Settlements are made by the Chinese in taels—originally a tael was an ounce of silver of a specified fineness—and since taels are in silver, for which values fluctuate daily through supply and demand the world over, a decided difference may attach itself to a transaction where a lapse of time occurs before settlement. Exchange is very much of a gamble, and with only a small variation will materially affect the profit on a cargo of lumber. When it is considered that the Chinese are granted credit of four, six or even eight months, the extent of the gamble becomes the more apparent. Some of the yards operated in the larger cities by Chinese have been in existence for many years, and the proprietors are well rated."

500 Pound Bear In Fight.

La Grande, Ore.—Twenty bullet holes were bored into the body of a 500 pound bear killed on Beaver creek near the La Grande water supply, according to word brought here. The bear, of unusual size, had been a menace to sheepmen, and a band of stockmen organized to kill it. When cornered the bear gave battle, and it took twenty bullets to kill it.

RECORD BELL RINGER.

South Bend (Ind.) Sexton Pulled at Rate of 755 Miles in Seventeen Years.

South Bend, Ind.—Seventeen years as sexton at St. Patrick's Catholic church in this city, pulling the rope on the great bell at the church more than 750 miles in that time, is the unusual record which has just been completed by Charles S. Schubert.

He has rung the bell for practically 7,900 services. He has averaged one service a day through the year and three times on Sunday, making an annual total of 429 services.

In addition to this, Schubert has rung the bell three times a day for the angelus. For each service he rings the bell twice. He averages ringing the bell six times on week days and nine on Sunday. Therefore in a year, averaging twenty-five strokes to the pull for the 2,346 times he rings the bell annually, he would give the bell 56,650 strokes. Now, in each pull he jerks the rope four feet, making 234,600 feet annually, or 3,988,200 feet, or 755½ miles in seventeen years.

GRANDPA OF WOLVES.

Caught by a Wisconsin Sheriff at Twin Lakes Weighed 119 Pounds.

Rhinelander, Wis.—The largest timber wolf ever seen in the county was trapped by Deputy Sheriff Andrew Anderson near Twin Lakes.

The deputy brought the animal's body to Gagen, where he had it on display for several days. Mr. Anderson, who has trapped for forty years and has captured more wild animals than almost any man in the state, declares that he has never before seen a wolf anywhere near as large.

Weighing 119 pounds, the body measured six feet from the end of the nose to the tip of the tail. The animal was three feet in height and had been caught in a trap before, the right forefoot having been clipped off.

Know What a Mole Is?

Sport Scarfs and Ties.

Sport scarfs are made in all of the bright sweater colors, and many are in a combination of colors. Rose, green and white and black combinations, white with black stripe borders and rose or green with white or black striped borders are all popular. Sport ties are made of inch wide grosgrain silk ribbon and are a yard in length. They are made in bright color combinations. Many are in roman stripe colors and black and white stripe combinations in bayadere effect. The ends are finished with fancy bead ornaments, and many have sides of the same.

BURR McINTOSH
as "J. Rufus Wallingford."

Burr McIntosh, who is pleasantly sojourning in Ithaca and playing the part of "J. Rufus Wallingford" in the Pathe series of that name, was walking back to his hotel the other day after a hard day's work in the Wharton studios where the pictures are being made. Ithaca's annual four days' fair was in progress and the streets were unusually crowded. In an alleyway just off the sidewalk our genial friend spied a crook of the kind who frequent fairs while on the hunt for easy money, made up to represent a farmer and standing behind an improvised counter made of a board upon the top of a barrel. On the board reposed three cards which looked to be the common ordinary garden variety. The crook was shouting "Here y'are, gents! Pick it out! Pick out the picture card. Any amount you can't!"

A crowd of men surrounded him, a number of whom had lost amounts running from one to ten dollars. Mr. McIntosh stopped to look. The crook saw him and cried, "Make way for the big fellow. He wants to pick it!" Mr. McIntosh put down a five dollar bill. The gambler covered it. The actor picked up the picture card. The crook cried "Ten this time!" "J. Rufus" put down his ten and again picked the picture card. The crowd began to laugh and jeer while the crook's face was a study in surprise and chagrin. "Come again for twenty" he finally yelled. Again the money was covered and again "J. Rufus" won. The crook was speechless. Mr. McIntosh then took from his pocket a card which is used in the "Wallingford" pictures, reading "J. Rufus Wallingford, Promoter." Then, turning to a gaping, small boy nearby he peeled a bill from the roll he had just acquired and said, "Here, sonny; see that large building on the corner? well go and get a thirty-day option on it."

"No wonder that fellow got the best of me," gasped the crook, looking at the card.

Later in the day the knight of the barrel learned that under the "make-up" of "J. Rufus" was the person of Burr McIntosh, who Kellar, the late Hermann, and other famous experts both here and abroad have declared to have no superior in the manipulation of a pack of cards.

BLIND COUPLE MARRIED.

Both Born Sightless, They Are Happy Now—Attracted by Her Voice.

Lafayette, Ind.—Without even having seen each other, love came to Ida Reeves of Lafayette and Frank J. Wagner of Terre Haute, and still without ever looking into each other's eyes they were quietly married here recently by Thomas Bridges, justice of the peace.

Both are blind and have been so from birth. Wagner is a piano tuner. He came here on a visit, met Miss Reeves and fell in love with her voice. He made the trip here for his marriage without assistance, and the blind husband and wife, after a short stay here, will journey alone to Terre Haute for residence.

"LITTLE PIPES" PLENTY.

But "Soup" Ran Low—Slang of Wet Goods Drummer.

Drumright, Okla.—In the code of the whisky peddlers and runners throughout the oil fields "big pipe" means quart bottles of whisky, and "little pipe" means pints. Beer is called "soup" when telegrams are sent or when it is ordered by telephone.

The code was revealed when a dealer at Wirt ordered by telephone from Waurika and got the wrong man on the wire.

"I have plenty of 'big pipe,'" he said, "but I am entirely out of 'little pipe,' and you may send along some 'soup.'"

The man who received the message made inquiries and learned that the order was for whisky and beer in the code.

CO-ED'S HUBBY WAS "MADE TO ORDER"

He Followed Every Rule Laid Down by Her.

Evanston, Ill.—Mrs. Howard Osborn, college bride of Northwestern university, always said if she married at all she'd marry a model man. Having no respect for what modern civilization is producing in the way of manly perfection, she proceeded to model a man after her own liking.

Result: She's now the bride of a handsome young collegian, first in athletics, first in scholarship, first in the hearts of his fellow students at Northwestern.

The college bride's plan has Mrs. E. H. Harriman's million dollar scheme for perfecting the human race beaten by a whole generation. Mrs. Harriman's perfect man will not arrive until 1980; Mrs. Osborn's is a 1915 model. And he owes his model character not to science, but to romance.

When Osborn came from Coldwater, Mich., to Northwestern university to "work his way through college" the first co-ed he became interested in was Mildred Lamke. Mildred didn't knit him a rose colored tie, nor did she embroider college pennants for him, but she did take a great interest in his diet, in his manner of living and his plan of study.

The very first present she gave him—three days after their first meeting—was this set of rules:

Rise at 6 in the morning.

Cold shower bath and exercise every morning.

Breakfast on dry toast and coffee.

Pay close attention to co-eds.

No smoking, no drinking, no loafing, no overeating.

Sleep eight hours out of twenty-four.

Practice daily in athletic field.

Howard followed every rule faithfully for four years. When he was graduated last June he had a gold medal for athletics, a gold medal for scholarship, several medals for minor achievements—and the most popular girl in college for his promised bride.

Takes the Right.

"Did you see where a judge somewhere had decided that a baby can cry in an apartment house?"

"Indeed, did he? I didn't know that was a case which waited for a decision."—Baltimore American.

MINNIE MADERN FISKE COMES NEXT WEEK

The Edison masterpiece "Vanity Fair" with Mrs. Fiske in the role of "Becky Sharp" which visits the Quirk theatre Wednesday, December 15, is unquestionably the greatest work ever executed by the house of Edison. There are upwards of four hundred people used in the great ballroom scene portraying Lady Richardson's grand social affair on the eve of Waterloo. The entire production is characterized by a lavish display of antiques, curios, hangings and furniture of the period obtained by ransacking the antique shops of Manhattan.

Mrs. Fiske gives a remarkable performance of "Becky Sharp", a role which she has played throughout America exactly one thousand times. The production is released through the newly organized Kleine-Edison feature service.

STATE'S INSANE SHORT-LIVED

Average Age at Death Is 55.2 Years—Women Patients Live Longest—Cost of Maintenance Increases.

Albany—Patients in fifteen hospitals for the insane of New York State have an average age of 47.10 years, according to figures which have just been compiled in connection with the recent State census. The patients of Willard State Hospital have the highest average age, 52.83 years, while those of Dannemora have the lowest, 35.32 years. In four out of fifteen institutions statistics reveal an average age of a trifle over 50 years.

The average age of first admissions in the hospitals of this state has been found to be approximately 38 years. The average age of death among patients of the state hospitals is 55.2 years. It is somewhat higher among the females than the males. The average age at death among the former is 57.1 years and among the males, 53.5 years.

Statistics recently compiled show that the average length of time spent by patients in the hospitals is 9.85 years. For males the average time is 9.54 years, for females approximately 10 years.

The constantly increasing cost of food products as well as the advancement of standards in the care of the insane has served to increase the annual cost of maintenance. Whereas in 1911 the annual per capita cost of caring for the patients in New York state hospitals was $189.71; in 1912 it was $203.45. It jumped to $206.09 in 1913 and to $208.91 in 1914. In 1915 the cost has increased to $210.89.

Out of 6,265 first admissions in 1914, 3,301 have been found with no family history of insanity, and the family history of 1,506 others could not be ascertained. The remaining 1,458, or 20.6 per cent. of the ascertained cases each had one insane relative or more.

Patients with alcoholic insanity have been found to have a higher percentage of alcoholic relatives than patients with other psychoses. The excessive use of alcohol appears in 21.6 per cent. of the ascertained cases in 1914 and in 24.8 per cent. of those of 1913. Of the 3,338 male first admissions of 1914, 1,027, or 30.8 per cent. were intemperate users of alcohol. The average age of the patients in each institution follows: Binghamton, 51.52; Buffalo, 48.11; Central Islip, 44.62; Dannemora, 35.32; Gowanda, 49.43; Hudson River, 47.17; Kings Park, 43.90; Long Island, 47.17; Manhattan, 43.65; Middletown, 50.66; Rochester, 48.48; St. Lawrence, 50.12; Utica, 49.25; Willard. 52.83.

LIME CHANGES LOOK PROMISING

Experience Gained at Oswego Points to Advisability of Moving Men Forward to Line.

When the High school basketball team faces the quintet representing the Morrisville Agricultural school tomorrow night on the City Hall court, it may be represented by a changed lineup as a result of the defeat at the hands of the Oswego Normals last Friday night.

In the Normal game, the Oswego team had a walkaway in the first half, but after making a change in Fulton high five, the locals outployed their opponents and during the latter period of the game made one point more than they did.

Frawley, heretofore on the second string, is fast developing into a good guard and it is more than likely that if his present rate of progress keeps up he will displace one of the first string men. Webb and Thompson, who are at present the regular guards are, however, playing a stellar game and the recent defeats of the team cannot be charged up to them. The difficulty with the team seems to have been lack of unity.

The introduction of intercollegiate rules into the amateur game means that closer attention must be paid to guarding. The game this year has been speeded up as a result of the new rules and it is necessary for all five men on the team to act as guards when the opposing team has the ball.

The local team has been practicing hard for tomorrow's game. The regular lineup, represented by O'Brien and Martin, forwards, Wallace, center and Webb and Thompson guard, will probably open the game.

A preliminary game will be added to the remainder of the games scheduled to be played here. Dancing at the library will follow.

Plans have been made to entertain the Morrisville visitors at an informal dance to be held in the library after the game.

SYRACUSE STARS COME NEXT WEEK

Now that arrangements are completed for opening the basketball season on the Maccabee court, in Church's hall, with the champion Y. M. H. A. Stars of Syracuse, the Maccabee five will devote the next few days to hard practice as the team which will come here from the Salt city is rated as one of the best in the State.

The Y. M. H. A.-Maccabee game will be played Thursday, December 16th. A preliminary will be staged between the Boy Scouts and another local team and the games will be followed by dancing.

Manager Snow is arranging games for the whole season, most of which will be played on the home court. Two Oswego teams have been booked and they will play here after the Syracuse game.

At phesent there are seven men on the Maccabee squad but the regular quintet has not been selected by Captain Ives. The seven men are: Crockett, Ives, Rohrball, Ward, Freedman, Baehr and Snow.

Crockett will hold down the center position but the other four places have not been decided upon. The forwards may be Snow and Ives while the guards will be chosen from the remainder of the squad.

In the cities where high class basketball entertainment is given, the game is usually followed by dancing, and the introduction of this idea into Fulton is new.

NONS BELIEVE IN RIGHT TO CHAMPIONSHIP HONORS

The Nondescript football eleven propose to refute the claim of the Shakespeare team of Oswego, whose announcement in newspapers laid claim to the championship of Central New York. The Nondescripts defeated the Oswego team in the first game of the season on the local girdiron.

The Nondescripts claim title to honors on the ground that they have defeated the Independents of Syracuse. The Independents have played a tie game with the Westcotts and Oakdales, so that the championship of Syracuse is undecided, thus leaving the Nondescripts claim undisputed.

NONDESCRIPTS TO BE DINED AT MEMBER'S HOME

Morris Frawley will give a dinner to members of the Nondescripts football team tonight at his home in West 3rd st. The guests will include a number of loyal supporters of the team. They will meet at 8 o'clock and go in a body to the Frawley home. Each member of the team will participate in the program of music and speaking.

FREDENBURGH'S DANCE OCCURS NEXT WEDNESDAY

The Fredenburgh dance, which is to be held in Grange hall next Wednesday, promises to be one of the novelties of the season. It will be a farmers' picnic dance and the promoters announce they will give away prizes to the "best looking farmer" and the "best looking farmer lady" appearing on the floor of the hall. A special prize will be awarded in addition.

BATTLE ISLAND CLAIM CRITERION

Case Believed to Be Basis in Settling Similar Claims Against State---Utica, the Scene of Battle.

The Utica Dispatch contains the following account of Tuesday's court battle in the case of the Battle Island Paper Co.'s claim:

The constancy of the flow of the Oswego Riveer which, according to claims filed against the State as a result of its utilization for barge canal purpose has a value of approximately $20,000,000, was the point at issue today in the trial of thec laim of the Battle Island Paper company of Fulton for $1,827,500 before Chief Judge Rodenbeck and Judge Ackerson of the Court of Claims. The morning session was given over largely to the examination of Frederick A. Emerick of Oswego, president of the Oswego River Watershed Association, an organization desiged to protect the interests of water power owners in the Oswego Valley.

Sanford W. Smith and Edward J. Mone, deputies representing Attorney General Egburt E. Woodbury, grilled Mr. Emerick in an effort to draw from him admissions which would sustain the State's contention that the variable flow of the Oswego River does not justify the heavy valuations placed upon the stream as a power producing agency by Oswego Valley claimants in general and the Battle Island Paper company in particular.

William Nottingham, who leads the legal staff of the Battle Island company, for whom Mr. Emerick was a witness, developed testimony which indicated that the value of the water power facilities formerly owned by the Battle Island company was approximately $500,000, the amount set up in the claim which the concern filed against the State after the appropriation of its property. The attorneys for the state contend that the power is worh only a fraction of this amount.

Under examination by Deputy Attorney General Mone, Mr. Emerick said he was the president of the Oswego River Watershed Association, the chief purpose of which was to safeguard the interests of its members. The State's attorney declared today they will delve further into the organization and purposes of this corporation as the trial proceeds.

For the purpose of comparison, Mr. Emerick was questioned as to the value of water power rights acquired by the Volney Paper company of Fulton, another claimant. He told of the Volney company acquiring in one instance a water power right involving 1,000 horsepower for $84,000. He said he based his estimates of the value of the Battle Island Company's water power upon the basis of a production of 1,500 horsepower.

The values of the several acquisitions made by the Volney company was the subject of frequent cross-fire between opposing counsel. Tilts over the competency ad relevancy of questions asked by State's counsel were numerous.

The determination of water power values is the most difficult task that has so far confronted the judges of the Court of Claims. The technical aspects of the propositions involved in the processes employed in fixing values require the constant attendance at the trial of expert engineers. Richard E. Phillips, claims engineer for the state, is assisting the Deputies Attorney General: L. W. Emerick and O. G. Breed, electrical and hydraulic engineers, respectively, are helping the legal staff of the Battle Island company.

Judges Rodenbeck and Ackerson frequently requested thew itness today to clarify statements of a technical character relating to power values. Mr. Emerick pointed out that the determination of water power values on the Oswego River is especially difficult because sales of power properties have been infrequent. The Battle Island case, which is the first big engagement between the State and the water power claimants will hereafter serve as a criterion in the settlement of similar cases. The rules laid down in this trial and thef actors guiding the court in the determination of values will act as precedents in the solution of the other claims which, in the Oswego Valley alone, aggregate $20,000,000 and throughout the State about $40,000,00.

That the sulphite mill of the Battle Island Paper company for consequential damage to which the concern seeks to recover $500,000 from the State, failed because of a lack of capital and not the absence of water-power facilities was the gist of a series of replies made by Mr. Emerick to question fromed by Attorney Mone. The State claims that other elements figured in the failure of the plant which was sold in bankruptcy recently for less than $28,000.

Bowser's Natural History

But His Writing Will Never See Print.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

After Mr. Bowser had smoked awhile after dinner he blandly said to Mrs. Bowser:

"There was a gentleman in the office this afternoon who gave me a bright idea, and I have started to act upon it."

"You are always acting upon somebody's bright ideas," she replied, with a little sarcasm in her voice.

"Oh, well, if you are going to talk that way at the beginning we won't talk at all."

"But I want to hear about the bright idea. You are always looking for it, and perhaps you have struck it this time."

It took Mr. Bowser two minutes to get over the little jar to his feelings, and then he said:

"The gentleman told me that there was a new magazine coming out. It is to be called the Naturalist. Its contributors are to be paid 40 cents a word, which is the highest price any contributor was ever paid. Two words and a half, Mrs. Bowser, represent $1. When a man can write a 500 word contribution in an hour, perhaps you will agree that it is rather a bright idea."

"I certainly will," replied Mrs. Bowser. "You interest me. Please tell me all about it."

Mr. Bowser pursed his lips, put on an air of great dignity and took from his pocket a manuscript and unfolded it. Then he said:

"After the gentleman left the office I turned to and dashed off the following article. It came to me as easy as grease, and it reads to me like a dream. Listen closely, Mrs. Bowser, and do not interrupt me. My subject is the rabbit, and here is what I wrote:

THE RABBIT AS A SWIMMER.

"'The rabbit is found in every part of the United States.

"'He is a white and gray animal about as large or a little larger than the cat.

"'He is a very harmless animal and no incident has yet been recorded where he has attacked a human being.

"'The principal diet of the rabbit is beefsteak and smoked ham, but when pressed by hunger he will eat cranberries, sour apples and potatoes. Cases have been known where he filched and carried off from a house mince pies and strawberry shortcakes.

"'That the rabbit might some time want to climb a tree after chestnuts, nature made his fore legs much the longest that they might reach around the trunk of a tree.

"'The mother rabbit brings forth thirty-two offsprings at a birth, and therefore there is not much danger of the rabbit becoming extinct for a long time to come.

"'The rabbit has been known to follow a country schoolma'am for three miles on the highway in broad daylight, but he offered her no violence and was probably actuated by curiosity alone.

"'A rabbit can run at the rate of fifty miles an hour when pursued by a dog. When pursued by two dogs his gait is double that of course.

"'Rabbits have been known to swim across a lake three miles wide.

"'If a quart of sweet cider is placed at the back door at night two or three rabbits will come and drink it all up before daylight, and they will be found a short distance away in such a state of intoxication that they can be gathered up without trouble.

"'The alleged rabbit pie served out at hotels and restaurants is made only of mutton and is an insult to Bunny and should be stopped by the law.

"'A rabbit has been known to live to the age of eight years, but he was owned by an old maid who fed him on taffy and gave him a feather pillow to sleep on. The average life may be given at four years. At the end of that time he has had fun enough to be glad to go.

"'The rabbit fur can be so dyed that a garment made of it can be called otter, beaver, lynx, mink or sealskin, and the animal is not praised as he should be.

"'The rabbit has no tail to speak of. Nature made him thus that he might not be caught and held fast while going through the thickest of thorns.

"'His large ears were placed on his head for ornament, the same as a mule's.

"'Any one carrying a rabbit's foot around in his hind pocket is sure to have good luck.'"

Mr. Bowser silently folded the manuscript and returned it to his pocket and looked at Mrs. Bowser and asked:

"Can you deny that the gentleman gave me a bright idea and that I have not worked it up to the best advantage?"

"Mr. Bowser," said she in reply, "you might have both hind pockets and all other pockets in your clothing stuffed full of rabbit's feet and they would not be sufficient to get that article accepted even by a family almanac!"

"By George, woman, what are you saying!" he exclaimed.

"Keep cool, sir—keep cool! Don't go to shouting or gesturing or getting unduly excited. If the editor of the Naturalist should ever receive such a contribution and he had a supply of pens and ink handy and had a little time to write, he would answer:

"'It is estimated that the rabbits of the United States pull down and devour at least 1,000 persons a year.

"'No rabbit was ever yet known to eat mince pies. They prefer custard pies.

"'The hind legs of a rabbit are the longest, as you ought to have known. They were made thus that he could climb a tree wrong end to and be all ready to come down again with promptness and dispatch if alarmed.

"'You are mistaken about the number of offspring at a birth. It is 150 instead of thirty-two. This is that the rabbit may in time crush out all the beef trusts.

"'No rabbit was ever satisfied with running fifty miles an hour. He started right off the mark at a pace of 125. If there were two dogs after him he went so fast that the human eye could not detect him.

"'All the rabbits in Ohio and Michigan swim across Lake Erie twice a day for the fun of the thing.

"'No rabbit with any self respect would get drunk on sweet cider. You must set out old rye or dry champagne.

"'Your rabbit pies of the restaurants and hotels not only contain mutton, but beef hash, ham hash, veal hash or other kinds of hash. The rabbit needn't feel insulted at the name.

"'Nature did not give the rabbit a tail because he was the last animal made and there were no tails to spare.

"'A rabbit was given large ears not for ornament, but that he might hear all the gossip going on in the woods. You may have observed many women with ears almost as large.

"'As to rabbits' feet bringing good luck, more than 10,000 men are drowned every year with their pockets stuffed with the tokens. Better carry around with you the tip of a donkey's tail.'

"That's what he would think of your bright idea, Mr. Bowser," said Mrs. Bowser as she finished.

Mr. Bowser sat with his mouth half open and the glare of a ferocious panther in his eyes, but he answered never a word.

"You had better have written of the rhinoceros in Africa, for you know as much about him as you do of the rabbits of the United States."

There was a decided twitch to Mr. Bowser's ear like a horse that is trying to make out a sound.

"We have three different works on natural history in the house, and yet you have never opened one of them. You broadly state that his fore legs are the longest. Our butcher has half a dozen hanging outside of his door every day. One glance of your eyes would have told you that you were wrong. All the other statements in your article are equally as absurd. In fact, Mr. Bowser"—

"Yes, my lady, in fact!" repeated Mr. Bowser, as he rose up and started for the hall tree.

"Are you going out?" was asked.

There was no answer. Mr. Bowser got into his overcoat and hat and banged the front door after him. He was not going to hunt the ferocious rabbit nor let the rabbit hunt him, but he wanted to walk and think over that bright idea which the gentleman had so kindly given him and which Mrs. Bowser had jumped on with both feet. As he walked he brought up at the drug store on the corner. He didn't enter the store, but stood outside humped over as became a forlorn husband. The druggist saw him through the window and came to the door and asked:

"Bowser, is there anything wrong?"

"Naw," was the gruff reply.

"I thought there was, old man, from your looking so used up. I think I am right. I think you and Mrs. Bowser have had a discussion, and you have come out of it with the loss of one leg, as usual. Go home, Bowser—go home and be glad that you have got such a smart wife."

Wrong Suit.

"But," she objected, "you're a Jack of all trades."

"Thou art the queen of my heart," he reminded her, "and the queen takes the Jack."

Refusing, however, to be impressed with this argument, the maid insisted on a new deal.—Judge.

Nothing Wrong.

"I want to lick my teacher,"
I hear a young chap say.
I looked upon the creature
With traces of dismay.

"A fine ambition truly,"
I muttered to this lad.
"To find one thus unruly
Is very, very sad."

"Oh, put your jaw in plaster!"
The lad replied with vim.
"I meant my boxing master:
It's all right to lick him."

He Showed Them How to Do It

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

During the latter part of the last century a great deal of whisky was distilled in the Tennessee mountains on which no tax was paid. One day a man appeared among the government officials who were endeavoring to hunt down a man named Hardwick, who had been for some time running a still concealed in the mountains and had thus far defied every effort on the part of the officials to trap him.

"What's the matter with you fellows," said the newcomer, "that you haven't got Hardwick? He's got to be taken and right away."

"All right, Mr. Barker," said Williams, the man addressed; "we'll do the job under your direction. Lead on."

Half a dozen men having been selected for the purpose, Barker started up the mountain side, followed by the others, and after a long and difficult ascent came upon a woman sitting on a rock crying bitterly.

"What's the matter?" asked Barker.

"Matter? Matter enough. Look a-yere." Pulling up her sleeve, she showed a welt that had evidently been made by a lash.

"Who did that?" asked Barker.

"My husband."

"Who is your husband?"

"Jim Hardwick."

Barker opened his eyes and looked knowingly at his men.

"Where is Hardwick?" he asked the woman.

"Reckon he's gone up to the"— She checked herself. "Who air you uns anyway?"

"I don't mind your knowing that we're revenue men, and we're going to get Jim Hardwick dead or alive!"

The woman stopped crying and looked fixedly at the men.

"I don't want you to kill him," she said, "but"—

"You mean," said Barker, "that you'd like to see him punished for his treatment of you?"

"Reckon I would."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You help us get him and we'll give you $100."

The woman's face took on a covetous look. Barker followed up his advantage. "Show us the way to the still and keep him talking till we can surround it."

"What'll you do with him?"

"We'll turn him over to you."

He counted out ten crisp treasury notes and handed them to the woman. She took them hesitatingly, as though she did not quite like the job.

Half an hour later the revenue men, led by the woman, had come to a ravine. She paused and said: "The still's up thar. Ef you uns stop this end of the ravin' he can't git out; you got him shore." Barker dashed forward, ordering the others to follow. Williams called to him to wait a moment—perhaps the woman was deceiving them—but Barker paid no attention to him, and he went on with the rest. They found the climbing difficult, but pushed on, Barker displaying an energy that put the rest to shame. Williams alone hung back, bringing up the rear. But nothing like a still appeared. Then the men began to tire of the difficult climb and one by one fell to the rear. Barker, coming to a perpendicular cliff, stopped, waiting till the others came up. Nothing was said till Williams joined them.

"Waal?" he said doubtfully.

"Where's the woman?" asked Barker.

All looked about for her, but she was not to be seen.

"I tell you, Mr. Barker," said Williams, "where I reckon she is."

"Where?"

"With that hundred dollars you give her. And I reckon the hundred dollars is whar the still is. And I don't reckon the still is in this yere ravine neither."

There was an ominous silence.

"I reckon," said Williams, "that we uns might as well go home. Before we could find the still—and I reckon we couldn't—the hull thing would be cleaned out."

"Do you think so?" asked Barker absently. He was thinking of the hundred dollars that he had given the woman and that he had intended to charge up to the government, but that now he would not dare to mention, and it would be a dead loss to himself. He was soon convinced by the others that to try to find either the still or Hardwick or his wife would be like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Mournfully he led the way down the mountain that he had climbed with such high hopes. When he came to the place where he had first seen the woman, there she was in her cabin near by washing dishes as unconcernedly as if nothing unusual had happened.

"Did you uns git him?" she asked, with well affected interest.

No reply was made, and she continued:

"Waal, I reckon you didn't or you would have brought him along. Since I didn't help you out I reckon I orter give you back the money." She handed Barker the hundred dollars, which he took shamefacedly, then without a word continued the descent.

"Gittin' moonshiners," said Williams to Barker, "ain't such easy work, after all."

"No," said the man who had come to Tennessee to show them how to do it; "I can't say it is. Don't you fellows say anything about this affair, and I'll report to Washington that you work under serious disadvantages."

Thoughts For Christmas

This was the chorus of that heavenly anthem which fell upon the shepherds' ears and which will ring down the centuries till the end of time: "Gloria in excelsis Deo—peace on earth, good will toward men."

May Christ's glory illumine every home and cradle, every workshop and counting house! May a brighter halo than the painters put around his head surround every mother and babe throughout the land at this Christmas tide!

Pretty Dutch Christmas Custom.

In Holland a pretty custom exists. On the night before Christmas, in commemoration of the star of the east, the young men of the town assemble and carry through the dark streets a large, bright star. All the people go out to meet it and give to the bearers of the "star of Bethlehem," as it is called, alms for the poor.

Woman's World

DR. KATHARINE B. DAVIS.

The recent discussion occasioned by the refusal of a Chicago doctor to operate on a mentally defective baby because, in his judgment, an operation meant condemning the child to an imbecile's fate makes this symposium of interest to the mothers of our race:

Dr. Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction, New York.—If a child would be a helpless idiot, then what purpose would be served by keeping it alive? But it seems to me that no one physician should ever have the right to decide so momentous a question.

Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, New York Clubwoman.—I think Dr. Haiselden has done a big humanitarian thing.

Judge Ben Lindsey, Denver Juvenile Court.—This case should give an impetus to the birth control movement.

Dr. Virgil P. Gibney, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University.—It is the duty of a doctor to relieve the sufferings of humanity and to prolong life regardless of what he individually may deem may be the outcome of such service.

Miss Florence Guernsey, Former President Federation of Women's Clubs.—I believe the Chicago physician was right if he was absolutely certain the child had such physical and mental defects as would make it a burden when it grew up.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Washington.—As a eugenist and a philanthropist I would let the child die. Perhaps as a parent I would have let it live.

Professor Franklin H. Giddings, Head of the Department of Sociology, Columbia University.—If the facts are as reported the child should be permitted to die. If more such children had been permitted to die there would be fewer molasses minded men and women in the community who object to letting such children die.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, Magazine Writer.—Few who have not had actual occasion to study the lot of large numbers of the feeble minded can conceive of the legacy of isolation, thoughtless ridicule and exploitation by the unscrupulous for vicious purposes which descends almost inevitably upon them the moment their natural protectors die or become unable to care for them, unless the community takes active and determined steps to protect them. The mere bitter facts that seven-eighths of our paupers, nine-tenths of our prostitutes and three-quarters of our criminals are feeble minded and that 90 per cent of all feeble minded girls become the mothers of illegitimate children before they are seventeen are a sufficient and convincing commentary upon the kind of influences which are likely to surround the lives of the feeble minded.

Dr. Max G. Schlapp, Director of the Clearing House For Mental Defectives, Postgraduate Hospital, New York, Psychiatrist to the Children's Court.—No physician has the right, on the strength of his own opinion, to sacrifice life or condemn a human being to death. At so early an age it is often difficult to make a diagnosis. Certain kinds of feeble mindedness, like cretinism, can be wonderfully helped. The public gets excited about a case of this kind, while there are so many thousands of high grade mental defectives, the most dangerous types, at large with no state machinery to protect them or society from them till after crimes are committed.

The state board of charities reports that in New York alone there are over 32,000 mental defectives, while state institutions care for less than 5,000.

Sewing Suggestions.

When sewing long seams use wire paper clips to fasten the edges of the cloth together, and no basting will be necessary. Turn up a hem the desired depth and place the fasteners at the bottom edge to hold it in place.

In making a buttonhole in serge the material often frays badly at the cut edges. To avoid this make a mark to show the exact size and position of the buttonhole by means of a tacking thread. Then stitch around this tacking thread with the machine. Now you are ready to cut the hole between the stitching and to work the buttonhole over the machine stitching.

When boys' blouses are bought ready made it is a good plan to cut off the narrow hem and sew on a narrow belt that just fits around the waist. Finish with button and buttonhole. It saves much time putting in strings.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES.

Historical Sketch to Be Given March, 1916, During Jubilee Month.

Fifty years ago the first Young Women's Christian association in this country was founded in Boston, March 3, 1866. On March 3, 1916, the fiftieth birthday of Y. W. C. A. work in America will be observed with a service of rejoicing in 966 associations. During this period the work has grown from one small association to an organization numbering 342,948 members in America, owning millions of dollars' worth of property in buildings to which members come for recreation, to make friends and to study subjects ranging from those on the curriculum of grammar grades to the university. Some one has called the educational department of the Y. W. C. A. the "greatest woman's university."

From Feb. 1 to March 3, 1916, the jubilation will continue, participated in by members and those interested in the work the country over. One of the important dates is Feb. 22, to be celebrated by a historical pageant of association work, "Girls of Yesterday and Today," which has been specially prepared by all the associations in the United States. It will be a pictorial presentation, with only two speaking parts. The girl of 1866, gowned in the dress of that period, and the girl of 1916, in up to the minute attire, will interpret the scenes.

Employment agencies have always been an important part of association work. Business positions and domestic situations have always been included. Domestic science was always on the curriculum whenever teachers could be found. Almost without exception the early associations opened boarding homes for young women, chiefly for self supporting girls. In 1872 Hartford, Conn., erected the first building for this purpose. The first association summer home was built at Asbury Park by the Philadelphia association in 1874. In 1891 Kansas City, Mo., opened the first self serving lunchroom.

In 1886 a convention was held at Lake Geneva and the National Young Women's Christian association, which later became the American committee, with headquarters in Chicago, was formed. In 1891 it was decided to form a permanent executive body, and the International Board of Women's and Young Women's Christian Associations was effected. In 1892 American delegates were invited to London, where Young Women's Christian association work was started. The world's organization was accomplished in 1895. In 1905 members from both the American boards merged the two organizations into one national body, with headquarters in New York city.

Dark Waists Are Popular.

The separate blouse is of simple character and is otherwise in line with the general style tendencies. The newest note is the introduction of dark waists, to match the tailored suit in color. These more dressy waists are made of chiffon, georgette crape, taffeta, satin, marquisette and crepe de chine. For the simple tailored waists for practical wear crepe de chine, in white or flesh color, is favored. Lace waists, black or white, are modish.

A limited quantity of the more elaborate numbers have the girdle finish, to be worn outside the skirt.

Wholly Inappropriate.

Versatile.

It was at a reception, and the two friends had met.

"Do you know," said Ina, "it was as much as I could do to keep from laughing when Josephine was just telling us about her fiance being 'so versatile'?"

"Meaning Webb?" replied Kathleen, smiling. "Well, dear, he is rather versatile, you know."

"Nonsense!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Fashionable Dark Silk Blouse.

Separate waist of dark silk with inset vest of self-material trimmed with fancy buttons.

An attractive blouse is always greatly to be desired. This season, when greatest emphasis is placed upon waists of dark color for general wear, there are offered many charming designs in tapestry blue, African brown, bordeaux, ground color and other smart shades.

The waist illustrated may be made with either high or open neck, while the front of the waist may be finished in pointed or straight outline. The inset vest has a box pleat, which usually serves as a foundation for some dainty button or braid decoration.

For a person of medium size the waist requires 2½ yards 36-inch material. The home dressmaker should study the cutting guide carefully before putting the scissors into the goods. Decide about the neck finish, and if the open effect is desired cut off upper edge of vest on double "oo" perforations.

The front and the sleeve are cut from an open width of material, and there is a little space between these two sections from the turn-over which may be cut.

Now, folding the goods in quarters, lay the plain collar and the vest on the

The Old Year Out and the New Year In

By EDITH V. ROSS

The celebration of New Year's day in New York has necessarily changed with the people who celebrate it. It was transplanted to New Amsterdam from Holland when a few houses clustered about the fort and every person in the village knew every other person. That was a fit community for making calls. When the people of New York had grown from hundreds to millions the custom broke down of its own weight.

How far back dates the custom of seeing the old year out and the new year in is not known. Certain it is that one night in New Amsterdam—Dec. 31—Hendrick, the watch, after calling the hour "Twelve o'clock and all's well," turned to walk to the next corner to repeat the announcement, when he saw the house of Killian van Gansback in a blaze of illumination from fully a dozen wax candles. Hammering with the great iron knocker, the upper half of the door was opened, and he saw a number of Dutch girls in many petticoats and young men in many pairs of breeches raising pewter mugs to drink in Holland gin to St. Nicholas, the patron saint of the town, "May he grant us a prosperous year!"

"What means this invasion of the night when all good citizens should be sound asleep in bed?" he cried. "Disperse!"

The moment it was noticed that the intruder upon the festivities was the watch every light was blown out and there was a scattering of the revelers. Bolts were shot, and in a few minutes the rooms on the ground floor were locked and the great front door was barred.

At that time Katrina Van Gansback was at a marriageable age, and her father had decided to wed her to old Dedrick Beekman, more than twice as old as she. Her mother was dead, and she had been brought up under the care of her aunt, Anneke Ten Eyck, a spinster of fifty. During the festivities on that eventful night the aunt drew Beekman into a side room for the purpose of arranging the settlement he was to make upon her niece and to appoint a day for the wedding.

Katrina was not only opposed to marrying old Beekman, but had a lover in young Wouter Ten Broeck, and the young couple were at their wits' end to find a way to defeat Anneke Ten Eyck's plan for marrying Katrina to Beekman. During the evening of the old-new year conviviality Katrina stood at the door listening to the arrangements that were being made to dispose of her. The moment the company were gone and the lights were put out she turned the key on her aunt and Beekman and led her father, who was feeble, up to his room and put him to bed.

A loud knocking came from below, but as the only persons in the house, except the couple locked in below, were Katrina and her father, and the latter was deaf as the stone steps in front of the house, their ability to get out depended solely on Katrina. When she had seen her father in bed and well covered, especially about the ears, she went out, closing the door behind her, and descended to the room where the prisoners were still hammering to be freed.

"Who's there?" asked the minx, pretending ignorance.

"Your Aunt Anneke. Let me out at once."

"Any one else?"

"Yes; Meinheer Beekman is in here with me."

"Oh, auntie, what a talk this will cause!"

"No scandal at all unless you blab."

"My keeping the secret will do no good. You and Meinheer Beekman must be married."

"I don't want to marry Meinheer Beekman, and I do want to marry Wouter Ten Broek."

There was no reply to this for some time. Evidently the parties within were consulting as to what it was best to do. Whether the woman refused to marry the man or the man refused to marry the woman was never known. At any rate, after a conference the aunt returned to the attack, or, rather, persuasion, telling her niece of the advantages she would enjoy as the wife of Meinheer Beekman, who was the largest dealer in pelts in New Amsterdam.

But Katrina was not to be persuaded, and her aunt was at last obliged to consent to her terms. No written pledge was required, for Katrina needed only to tell the story to set the tongues of the town wagging about her aunt and Meinheer Beekman.

As soon as an agreement was reached Katrina unlocked the door, and Meinheer Beekman, taking down the bars to the front door, stole away in the darkness. The next day the betrothal of Katrina and Wouter Ten Broek was announced.

Katrina kept the secret till after her aunt had been dead some years, then told it to her daughter, who was about to be married. The daughter handed it down, and it is preserved in the archives of the family to this very day.

However, the story does not prove that the Dutchmen of New Amsterdam were in the habit of seeing the old year out and the new year in, else the watch would not have broken up the party.

The Kitchen Cupboard

SANDWICHES FOR AUTUMN.

CHESTNUT CREAM SANDWICHES.—Peel, boil, drain and mash large French chestnuts. Rub them through a sieve and mix thoroughly with sweet cream. Add a touch of salt or sugar, as is liked, and spread the paste on thin slices of fresh white bread denuded of crust and cut in round disks. Use a biscuit cutter for shaping after slices are cut.

Fig Sandwiches.—Soak dried figs overnight in cold water to cover them and then simmer over a slow fire until tender. Add half a cupful of sugar and the juice of half a lemon to each pound of figs during the cooking. Chill them thoroughly in the icebox and then chop in a paste and spread on thin white bread or on thin slices of pound cake. Use a diamond cutter for shaping these.

Marshmallow and Nut Sandwiches.—Toast some fresh marshmallows and mix them in a bowl with chopped English walnuts. Cut white bread in star shapes and put the paste on the lower slice only. This is the rule for all sandwiches.

Cream Cheese Sandwiches.—Get the square cheeses and see that they are perfectly fresh. Mash in a bowl to a paste, add a little sweet cream beaten up first and a teaspoonful of sauce to every cheese; salt and paprika to taste. Spread on thin fresh graham bread cut in disks. Chopped olives or shavings of pimento may be added to this filling.

Bacon Sandwiches.—Wisps of breakfast bacon, delicately broiled, make the most appetizing of sandwiches, especially if put between toasted graham bread. The small shreddings of bacon must lie on lettuce and be seasoned with paprika or red pepper. These are as appetizing cold as hot.

Tomato and Horseradish Sandwiches.—Slice a large tomato thin and sprinkle it with salt and pepper. Mix a little bottled horseradish—it can be bought at the grocer's—with a tablespoonful of olive oil. Spread thin slices of lightly buttered gluten bread with the horseradish mixture and put the tomato slices between.

Mayonnaise Sandwiches.—Make a piquant mayonnaise, using plenty of red pepper and lemon juice in the seasoning. Spread on a bit of lettuce put between fresh gluten bread trimmed of all crust. Only a little of the mayonnaise must be used, for it is likely to drip when it becomes warm.

The report of the superintendent of the Tuberculosis Hospital, Dr. A. Garfield Dunbar, was of much interest as the superintendent asks an appropriation of $31,700 for the coming year. Last year, the hospital spent $22,169.69. Of that amount $9,168.28 was spent for food; milk cost, $689.48; eggs, $885.79; butter, $377.57; chickens and meats, $1,315.42. There was paid for salaries $5,317.50. This year $15,000 is asked for maintenance, $7,200 for salaries, inasmuch as two more resident nurses are now employed there, making four in all; $2,000 for furnishings for the annex; $1,500 for changes in plans of addition; $6,000 for a new boiler-house and laundry.

Hospital Needs Money

It is recommended that a dairy be established and from the items in the report also a chicken farm, so that the institution may raise its own eggs. There is some talk among the Supervisors, however, of getting all of the farm, excepting a few acres for a garden about the house. There were 14 in the sanitarium October 1st, 1914. There were admitted during the year, 61; left during the year, 52; discharged, 13; left voluntarily, 33; absconded, 1. Conditions in leaving: Disease arrested, 13; improved, 18; unimproved, 15; expired, 5. average length of stay, 149 days; in santarium September 30th, 23. There is a large waiting list, it is said. Received from patients during the year, $2,700.59; received from farm, $188. Total, $2,888.59. The report was ordered filed and printed.

Dr. Dunbar, superintendent, and Dr. J. L. Moore and H. P. Allen, members of the Board of Managers, were given the privilege of the floor.

County Farm Prospers

Mr. Jackson presented the report of the Committee to Settle with the County Superintendent of Poor and asked that Mr. Stone be heard after the reading of the report. The past year there was spent for outdoor relief, $4,028.05; to the Oswego Orphan Aslyum, $291.42; St. Francis Home, $251.03; Oswego and Fulton Hospitals, $611.65; house and farm, $16,191.69; lunacy examination, $5. Total, $21,378.24. The levy last year was $10,000 and there was received from the towns of the county $7,710. The farm produce brought $2.862.75. Total, $20,572.75. Deficit, $805.49. Mr. Stone explained that while there is an apparent deficit yet the inventory for 1915 exceeds that of 1914 by $1,933.85. The average cost of maintaining the inmates in the county house is $2.67 per week. The farm was greatly improved by buying fertilizer used upon it, taking off stone, removing stumps, building ditches and new fences, etc. The addition to the farm purchased a few years ago for $3,500 has been doubled in value. The report went over one day.

Probation Officer W. J. Dempsey submitted an interesting report. It showed that thirty-eight cases had been sent to him the past year by the courts, that fifty other sentences to report to him are in force, making eighty cases in all that he starts out with the coming year. Thirty-five were discharged and three re-arrested. Mr. Dempsey received 508 visits from paroled men who call at his house and he visited 105 others. He collected $1185 in fines, received $558 in hestititions made, and $112 for the support of children, a total of $825.

Besides he estimates that there has been saved to the county $4,680 by keeping these prisoners out of jail and letting them work to support themselves and families, and $3,120 saved by keeping the families together instead of sending them to institutions, a total of $7,800. The report in its entirety is to be printed in the Journal.

By Mr. Riley: That the county enter into a contract with the Onondaga County Penitentiary for the keeping of persons sentenced for failure to support their families, in that institution.

John R. Pidgeon, for the Board of Charity, appeared and urged the measure. He said that it cost the city of Oswego $6,000 to support the family of Dad Francis. Other families whose heads are chronic offenders in this regard have cost from $500 to $1,800.

POTATOES THAT ARE PROFITABLE

(Weekly News Letter)

With the close of the potato harvest season for 1915 the time seems opportune to call to the attention of both the grower and the seedsman the desirability of considering seriously a very material reduction in the number of varieties grown in any given community or section of the country.

It has been the history of every other staple crop that the fewer the varieties grown the more easily are they marketed. The pioneer fruit grower in America tried to grow as large a list of varieties as he could afford to purchase, while today the tendency is to reduce the list to the least number that can be depended upon to meet the market requirements. The reason for this is that it has been found a much easier task to sell large quantities of one variety than an equal quantity made up of a large number of varieties. It is believed that the same principle applies to the potato crop.

In a recent publication by the department, Bulletin No. 176, a system of classification of potatoes is presented in which the leading commercial types are referred to 11 groups, and a list of the varieties studied which are thought to belong to each group is furnished. In many cases the varieties listed in each group are so nearly identical that in the opinion of the author of this bulletin there is no justification for the retention of more than 10 per cent. of them.

The commercial grower should determine what group or class of potatoes is best adapted to his climatic and soil conditions, and then confine his efforts to not more than one or two varieties within that group. In this way it will be possible for him to become more familiar with the behavior of the variety he is growing; to recognize its special cultural requirements; and to offer for sale a much more uniform and high-grade product than where he is dissipating his energies on a dozen or more varieties.

The potato growers of some of our Middle West States, particularly those of Wisconsin, are being strongly urged by their potato specialists and State associations to adopt the community plan of growing potatoes of one, or, at the most, two varieties. In this way the buyer can be assured of securing a uniform stock in carload lots, of Green Mountain, Rural New Yorker, or other classes of potatoes.

The movement must come from the grower through confining his efforts to a few varieties, preferably not more than one or two. These should be selected intelligently, with reference to soil and climatic conditions. For example, the Green Mountain group is particulary well adapted to the cooler and moister sections of the United States. The Rural New Yorker, while succeeding under similar conditions, is also able to produce satisfactory crops where air and soil temperatures are higher, and where the summer precipitation is scant, provided moisture is abundant in September and October. The Irish Cobbler group, consisting of early varieties, is at its best in the North, but also produces well when planted as an early truck crop in the South.

The size of the seedsmen's lists is very largely, if not entirely, governed by the grower, and the remedy lies wholly with him.

The effects of the potato grower, dealer, and seedsman should be directed as follows:

1. Reduce the variety list to a few standard commercial varieties.
2. Standardize these by careful selection and culture.
3. Adopt the community plan of growing but one or two varieties and advertise this fact to the public.
4. Demand a higher grade seed potato from your seed grower or dealer, but in so doing be willing to pay a correspondingly better price for it.

CO-OPERATION WILL PLACE CITY WITH LEADERS

lenga said, if you will pay your dues in the Chamber of Commerce—and then back up the board of directors in the Chamber of Commerce.

"If there is anything at any time you do not like spit it out. Do anything under the sun—but be a man. If you simply pay your dues that means nothing. If you do not take an active interest in the meetings of the Chamber you are not entitled to any kick. You must act; indifference is ignorance.".

At the conclusion of Mr. Hollenga's talk the hearty applause attested the big spirit in which the frank talk had been received.

President Whitaker before bringing the meeting to a close asked that all endeavor to follow the suggestions given, and then invited each to remain for the buffet lunch to be served.

Good cheer reigned supreme among the men as they partook of the substantial goodies, and laughingly repeated some of the witticisms employed by the speaker. It was a sight good to see, and the embryo civic spirit was decidedly in evidence.

COMMUNIPAW REPORTED SAFE AT ALEXANDRIA

Washington—Conflicting dispatches from Rome and London, as to the American tank steamer Communipaw, one reporting her sunk, off Tobruk, Tripoli, the other announcing her arrival at Alexandria, Egypt, left officials here in suspense,

Official advices from Ambassador Page at Rome, reporting that an American ship "held to have been the Standard Oil tanker Communipaw" had bee torpedoed and sunk, were received during the forenoon by the State Department. It was thought likely that Ambassador Page had received the same report as that transmitted in press dispatches last night from Rome and that the message from him today might simply have been delayed in transit.

No confirmation of the news dispatches from London sent after last night's press cablegram from Rome, reporting the Communipaw's safe arrival at Alexandria, had been received by the department.

More details as to the Communipaw, as well as the Standard Oil tanker petrolite, reported attacked by a submarine in the Mediterranean last Sunday morning are being awaited.

Tobruk is 350 miles or more by direct said from Alexandria. While the date of the reported attack on the Communipaw, which was said to have resulted in sending her to the bottom. was not given in Rome dispatches, it was pointed out that had the Communipaw left Alexandria immediately after her arrival she would not have been able to reach Tobruk, till late last night.

UNDER THE SAME ROOF.

Live Five Generations of the Macomber Family at Atlas, Mich.

Atlas, Mich.—Living under the same roof here are representatives of five generations, ranging in age from ninety-three years to seven months. The roof is that of Mr. and Mrs. John Macomber, with whom live Mrs. Macomber's mother and her daughter, granddaughter and great-grandson. Mrs. Margaret McCandlish, though ninety-three, is in fairly good health.

During her youth in Scotland, where she was born, she lived near the estate of the Gladstones and frequently attended the same church where William E. Gladstone worshiped. She came to America in 1842, and two years later was married to John McCandlish, also a native of Scotland. They came to Michigan in 1847 and took up land near Atlas.

SCIENCE TO AID PRISONERS.

Philadelphia Will Treat Them as Sick Instead of Criminal.

Philadelphia.—Present methods fo treating prisoners at the House of Correction are to give way to the most advanced practice. Science, as represented by a board of prominent physicians, will consider the men and women interned there in the light of sick people and not as criminals. Their ailments will be classified, and treatment calculated to make useful men and women of them will be put into effect.

After their discharge they will be recommended to various dispensaries for further treatment and will be watched by social workers. Four inspections a year will be made by the board.

PLAN MAKING CHURCH COMMUNITY CENTER

Reforms Are Suggested For Country House of Worship.

Columbus, O.—One out of every nine country churches has been abandoned in recent years. Only one-third are increasing in membership, and two-thirds have ceased growing. Eighty-three per cent have less than 100 members; 21 per cent have less than twenty-five, 27 per cent between twenty-five and fifty, and 34 per cent have between fifty and 100. Only 6 per cent have individual preachers, while 26 per cent share ministers with another church; 23 per cent have one-third the time of a minister, 27 per cent have one-fourth time, 14 per cent have one-fifth time, 5 per cent have one-sixth time. A large proportion of preachers receive about the same pay as a day laborer. Less than 40 per cent of the rural population are now church members.

These facts, shown in an extensive rural survey of Ohio, whose results were announced recently, are applicable to most states, according to the officers of the commission on church and country life. Plans for state surveys to secure definite data for each locality were to be formulated at the national convention here of the commission on church and country life in December, with President Wilson and Gifford Pinchot among the speakers announced.

The Ohio survey is considered the most thorough ever undertaken, but the campaign not only for surveys, but for speedy reforms to make churches community centers as well as houses of religious worship, is to be carried into every part of the country within the next year.

Here are the causes which the country church of the near future must promote in order to save itself, according to a much discussed report by President Kenyon L. Butterfield of Massachusetts Agricultural college ready for presentation to the commission: Good roads, better farming, encouragement of agricultural college extension courses, community beautification, public health and recreation, temperance, better schools, Saturday half holiday for agricultural laborers, community athletics, observance of religious and patriotic holidays and home coming weeks, community planning and contentment with farm life.

The church must become the social center for the community, with its minister leading in a variety of interest, and religion thereby will become a stronger appeal, says the Butterfield report.

MICE BELIEVED TO HAVE CAUSED FIRE IN STORE

A fire, which Assistant Chief Rude thinks, was caused by rats or mice knawing on matches, was discovered early this morning by Patrolman Alnutt in the C. E. Brooks grocery store in East Broadway.

The officer turned in an alarm from the box at Broadway and 1st sts. at 3:55 a. m., and when the Department arrived it was thought the fire would assume large proportions.

The firemen broke in the door and through the dense smoke saw that the flames were confined to a quantity of dry goods located on a shelf in the rear of the store. The matches which probably caused the fire were on the same shelf. The fire was extinguished almost immediately by the use of the large hose. The damage to the stock is small. The building itself was not damaged.

Do you know what we are manufacturing here in Fulton? Have you ever given thought that your City ranks favorably in the Industrial world?

Has it ever occurred to you that the accumulation of amazing fortunes, as we have witnessed since the latter part of the 19th century, is largely due to brains, by letting opportunity enter, when it knocked? Inventions of all kinds, as for example new ways of transportation, manufacture and electricity, were the means to create these fortunes. The men who created these fortunes also secured for themselves greater personal power than had ever before been known. Out of this was born the use of these fortunes for self advancement and from a selfish, one-sided, narrow standpoint, recognizing no responsibility whatsoever towards the less fortunate members of society. However at that time a silent and mighty change came over the sentiment and ideals of the business world. Men began to realize that the accumulation of immense fortunes was not the only and greatest end of life, that the spending of these fortunes in luxury and waste did not bring happiness and satisfaction that those who had not would not forever stand silent, while those who had took more and flaunted luxury in the face of want.

Give this a little thought, if you please.

The proper thing to do in the City of Fulton is to make acquaintance with your fellow men and to find out that he is not such a bad sort of a fellow after all.

The merchants of our City should co-operate more than they have done for the past; they should know each other better and talk matters over once in a while and they will find out that it is for their own good.

BOWLING WINS POPULAR FAVOR

Interest Increases As Season Advances—Honors for Everybody and Joy for the Spectators.

Titular honors for high game in the City League match bowled last night between the Jogalongs and Onyx A. C. were divided among three men, Van Buren, Powell and Stauring, who each rolled 203. Stauring made 203 in two of the three games and he easily took high honors for high total with 601 pins to his credit.

The consistency of the Onyx A. C. team work was particularly noticeable each man on the team scoring in the five hundreds. Van Buren scored the highest of any of his teammates and Powell followed a close second by a margin of one point. The other three men on the team had respectively 518, 519 and 522.

The Onyx A. C. took the whole three games from the Jogalongs by a safe margin of pins.

GOOSEBONES WIN EASILY FROM B. C.

Former First Ward Aggregation Developed Unaccountable Streak of Ennui, Then the Trick.

The Bachelor A. C., formerly the First Ward basketball team, was defeated last night in the City Hall by a team represented as the Goosebones, of Oswego. The score was 34-11. But the brilliant work of the two Oswego forwards, Myers and Cinnamon, there would have been a close game, but these two men with thel arger experience, by working together made most of the points for their team. They were both exceptionally fast and having had professional basketball experience understood the dribbling game which was a big factor in assisting them to cage the ball.

The local boys in attempting to stop the dribbler repeatedly fouled by holding and ten points were added to the Oswegonians score in this way.

A large number of spectators attended the game. The lineup of the two teams was as follows: Bachelor A. C.—Forwards, Yondo and Ives; Center, Painter; Guards, Dutton and Smith. Goosebones—Forwards, Myers and Cinnamon; center, Sheeley; guards, Shannon and Faber.

Substitutions — Bachelor A. C., Simmons for Dutton. Goosebones—Nite for Sheeley, Hurley for Shannon and Johnson for Faber.

PAPER CO. CASE IS FINISHED

Mr. O. C. Breed Declined to Produce Data at Yesterday's Trial in Utica.

Yesterday's Utica Observer contains the following account of the case of the Battle Island Paper company against the State:

The flat refusal of O. C. Breed, hydraulic expert for the Battle Island Paper company of Fulton, to produce fundamental data and records relating to the flow of the Oswego River at Fulton injected life into the morning session of the trial of this company's claim before Judges Rodenbeck and Ackerson of the State Court of Claims. Mr. Breed was testifying as the first witness for the paper company, when he was asked by Deputy Attorney General Edward J. Mone whether or not he had agreed while on the stand at the Syracuse term of the court to produce these records, taken privately, in order to permit a comparison with the State's records.

"I did not make any such agreement," replied Mr. Breed. "If I remember rightly, I refused to produce those records."

"And do you refuse now?" inquired Deputy Mone.

"I do," responded the witness.

Personal Property

Asked for his reasons in declining to produce these records, which the State attorneys claims were utilized by him in the draft of his conclusions as to the worth of the Battle Island water power, he replied:

"First, those records are my own observations, taken privately. Secondly, I utilized the records of the State in making some of my calculations. I do not feel constrained to bring my own private matters into a case."

Immediately following, Deputy Attorney General Mone launched into a series of questions designed to bring out the reason for apparent changes in records that have figured in the calculations as to the value of the Battle Island property or more specifically the loss sustained by this company as a result of the canalization of the Oswego River upon which its plant was located. Changes in the records which materially change the conclusions of experts who have computed the value of the property were apparently made. Deputy Attorney General Sanford W. Smith and Edward J. Mone were eager to ascertain how these changes were made. Mr. Breed said he could give no reason. The State's attorneys made it plain that they could not understand the reason for these technical alterations which related to the number of turbines installed in the plant, but did not impute them to any untoward motive on the part of anyone connected with the case.

Mr. Breed estimated the value of the water power previously owned by the Battle Island Paper company at $410,000. He was asked when he had reached this conclusion and replied that this was his first utterance. Under examination he recalled that he declined to estimate the property's value while on the stand at Syracuse.

Objections Raised

George W. Driscoll of counsel for the Battle Island company, took issue frequently with Deputy Attorney General Mone over the relevancy of questions put to the witness and his qualifications. The first clash came during the examination of Mr. Breed, which was intended to more fully bring out his qualifications to testify as to the value of the property. Mr. Driscoll told Judge Rodenbeck that he believed the competency of Mr. Breed to place the values upon the various adjuncts of the Battle Island company. To questions dealing with the records which Mr. Breed refused to produce and others relating to the regularity of some of the records in the case, Mr. Driscoll entered objections.

The presentation of the case of the Battle Island company was concluded early this afternoon. The State will begin the presentation of its case within a few days. A short recess was asked for the purpose of giving the State's attorneys and Engineers Richard E. Phillips and John Newton, who are collaborating with the State's counsel, time to prepare the technical propositions to be submitted. It is said that the State will be able to completely put in its defense to the claim in a week or 10 days.

The witness who preceded Mr. Breed was F. W. Hollingsworth, an expert on values. He is superintendent of the Oswego Pulp & Paper Co. of Fulton. He said he valued the plant of the Battle Island company at between $500,000 and $600,000, but admitted afterwards under examination by Deputy Attorney General Smith and Mone that he based this estimate upon a comparison of the Battle Island concern with that of the Oswego Pulp & Paper Co. The State's attorneys objected to this comparison on the ground that a proper estimate could not be made because of the difference in water power facilities at the two plants. The engineers for the State claim there is a constant flow at Fulton, while at Battle Island the "head," which is the difference between tha lower level and thec rest of the water above the dam varies from three to nine feet. During his examination, Mr. Hollingsworth was asked by Deputy Attorney General Mone: "Can you define a horsepower?"

"No, I cannot," he replied.

More Witnesses to Be Called in Plot Case

New York—Important and unexpected developments have occurred in the government investigation into the alleged activities of Franz von Rintelen and associates to incite strikes in munitions factories, it is learned from federal officials in charge of the inquiry.

Following United States Attorney Marshall's sudden summons to Washington it was announced that the grand jury which is investigating the RRintelen case would probably not be convened before next week, and that a large number of new witnesses will appear before it. It was stated at the Federal building today that "things were sizzling" but officials refused to give details.

For the first time today it was officially admitted that certain German and Austrian consuls may be mentioned in the report of the grand jury. It was also stated that one of the subjects was the strike of the General Electric company's works in Schenectady last summer. Twelve thousand workers were involved in this strike whcih lasted for several weeks. At the time itw as repeatedly rumored that German influences were behind the strikers. The eGneral Electric company has large contracts with the allies for munitions.

Assistant United States Attorney R. H. Wood, who is in charge of the criminal department of the district attorney's office, said that the government had received valuable aid from the labor leaders who had voluntarily comef orward to tell what they knew of the work of the German agents.

Von Rintelen is now held by the English government as a German spy A careful search of his baggage brought to light several letters from prominent society women in this country, and the information gleaned from there letters has materially aided the British secret service agents in this country.

Von Rintelen is now in the Tower of London awaiting execution. He has such a fund of valuable information that his death has been postponed from time to time in the hope that he would confess to save his life. But he has stood firm and says that he is not afraid to die.

AUSTRIAN CONSUL WANTS CHARGES WITHDRAWN

Washington—Cancellation of the exequator of Alexander von Nuber, Austrian consul general in New York city, and a demand that he leaves the country or face criminal charges will be the answer of the United States to the demand of the Austrian charge here that the Department of Justice withdraw its charge that he plotted to destroy American ammunition plants.

It is understood on high official authoritiy that this action would have been taken before except that President Wilson did not desire to start any additional controversy with Austria-Hungary until the Ancona demand had been received at Vienna. It is understood that not only will Von Nuber's exequator be cancelled but similar action will be taken in the cases of at least three Austrian consul representatives whose identity is at present withheld.

Foward Move By Germans Prelude to Peace Talk

London—From all the theatres of war come reports of advances of the troops of Germany and her allies. These bulletins of victory are being issued suspiciously enough on the eve of the meeting of the Reichstag when the Kaiser is to demand, through his Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollwey, that the people of Germany, impoverished and facing ruin, shall find $2,500,000,000 more for war.

When Germany reads today that the French and British forces are being driven back along the Strumnitza, that the Allies are contemplating a withdrawal from Salonica and the abandonment of the Balkan campaign, that the Bulgarians are on the verge of trapping the remnants of the main Serbian army, that the Huns have begun another advance in the Champagne, that the Turks are attacking the British at Kut-el-Amara and that the Kaiser is organizing an army of half a million, or four hundred thousad; of his new Turkish subjects to invade and capture India, it is expected every son of the Fatherland who has a thaler left will shell out.

The Germans will not be told that the Kaiser's great eastern army is helpless in Russia; that the pitiful gain in the Champagne has been already lost; that the French are only waiting for the opportune moment to repeat their big push forward; that the Bulgarians in Serbia have been decimated by the Franco-British artillery, and that the British, safe at Kut-el-Amara, have been heavily reinforced—that might have a bad effect on the loan and force Germany to believe that the Chancellor's talk of peace is not that of a victor dictating terms but of a gambler, who has staked all and lost, making a final desperate throw to avert complete disaster.

The pro-peace pests in Parliament here—they are few in number and as useful as mosquitoes—drew forth from Mr. Asquith in the House of Commons yesterday the declaration that if the enemy offereed seriously tom ake peace the matter must first be considered by all the Allies, and that when something definite is decided upon Parliament will be kept fully informed.

Though the German Chancellor is expected to tell the Reichstag what victorious Germany will accept to lay down arms, I am in a position to state that the members of the British government have the information that the Kaiser would be glad to accept the satus quo ante as a basis. But there is no chance of peace being considered here until the enemy is thoroughly beaten. This, despite the buzzing of a few peace pests in Parliament, and the approach to Europe's shores of the strange collection in Mr. Ford's ark.

ARMS PLANT GET WORKMEN

Mr. B. H. Friggs Leaves on Sunday for Delaware After Contracting With Local Workmen.

Mr. B. H. Briggs has been representing the Remington Arms company of Delaware in this city since Tuesday by recruiting employes for that company's plant. Upon former visits to this city for a like purpose applicants entered into a two years' contract. This term in the present contract has been eliminated.

Mr. Briggs states that most of the employes of the Remington plant live in Philadelphia which is thirteen miles distant. At once a workman arrices distant. At once a workman arrives etc. Two automobiles are kept in constant service for the services of new arrivals.

Mr. Briggs will leave this city Sunday, but a large number of the men with whom he has contracted will probably be leaving in groups for the next two weeks as some of them are at present employed at other work.

REFUTES CHARGE OF VIOLATION OF NEUTRALITY

Washington—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, British ambassador today laid before Secretary of State Lansing evidence to refute the charges that a British warship chased the Danish steamer Vinland inside of the three-mile limit off the Atlantic coast two weeks ago.

Ambassador Spring-Rice submitted the testimony of the captain of the warship who stated that at no time did he come closer than four and one-half miles of the coast. The name of the British warship was withheld by the ambassador.

CANAL LANDS APPEAL MOST

Petitioners Block Ambition of Manufacturers to Secure Vacant Lands for Extension of Plants.

Petitions are in circulation in and about business places here, which set forth the advantages, as seen by the signers, of the plot of ground at 1st and Oneida sts., as ad esirable place for a public market.

The petition totally ignores the desires of manufacturers who would secure the abandoned canal lands in order to extend their plants and presents one side only of the case, namely, that the market ought to be built on the new land and nowhere else. This is in spite of the fact that other sites for the market have been suggested—places where articles of food might be exposed less to unclean surroundings.

The petition now circulating is worded thus:

"We the undersigned believing it to be to the interests of the City of Fulton and its inhabitants that the abandoned canal land at the junction of 1st and Oneida sts. be utilized by the city for public market purposes and that thei nterests of the City of Fulton and the farmers of the surrounding community will be greatly served by such a market, we respectfully urge Hon. Frank E. Fox, Mayor of the City of Fulton and Hon. Thaddeus C. Sweet, Assemblyman, to use their utmost endeavors in procuring such plot for the City of Fulton."

About one half of the signers are farmers on the R. F. D. routes out of Fulton.

RESTORATION OF WORN-OUT LANDS

One of the prime factors in the problem of the conservation of the natural resources of this country, or any country, is the restoration to fertility of the soils of farms which have become exhausted by constant cropping and which cannot now be profitably cultivated. In a general way, these so-called worn-out lands constitute almost if not quite entire farms and perhaps in the majority of instances portions of farms. Even in the latter case these comparatively useless fields impose a burden on the farmer which he would gladly throw off.

For the past five years Frederick McNair, of Elmira, a retired farmer of much experience and technical knowledge of agriculture, has conducted experiments in the hill counties of the state, and also in the valleys, to determine the extent to which these depleted farms and portions of farms can be brought again into fertility. In the course of his experiments he has studied farm conditions in practically every rural township in the state, and has made upwards of 1,000 systematic tests, some of them extending five years. It is a theory, now, it is claimed, borne out by scientific experiment, that every worn-out farm or field has within itself the means of rehabilitation without artificial fertilizers, by the restoration of nitrogen to the soil through the action of bacteria forstered by the growth of suitable legumes, such as the various clovers and alfalfa.

It is understood that Mr. McNair has tabulated the results of his numerous tests of the treatments of soils, and will place those results before the farmers of New York, New England, and the great South, where there are millions of acres of soil-sick farming lands which are now barren, but which lend themselves well to economical restoration.—Rochester Chronicle-Democrat.

O'HARA IS SECOND ONLY TO CHAUNCEY OLCOTT

An annual event in the theatre which is eagerly looked forward to by local play-lovers, is the engagement of Fiske O'Hara, the delightful Irish actor-singer, who has endeared himself to our theater goers by the clean and wholesome type of plays he presents. He is announced this year in a new romantic Irish play from the pen of Augustus Pitou, Sr., entitled "Kilkenny." The story is woven around characters and incidents that existed in Kilkenny in 1810. Mr. O'Hara has been provided with five new songs, which he will render during the progress of the play.

OUR RURAL CONDITIONS

Not many weeks ago The Evening Times presented in this column a few facts concerning farming conditions in Iowa. It was shown how general is becoming the alarm felt over the numerous vacant farms in that State and the corrective measures that are being adopted to counteract unfavorable conditions, one of which is the formation of a state organization whose purpose is to buy up large areas of land and sub-divide it into small parcels, these to be rented or sold to men who propose to till the land in an efficient and conscientious manner.

Right on top of the Iowa information come figures from Nebraska authorities concerning farm ownership there, which is in effect, that the number of tenant farmers in Mr. Bryan's state are increasing. This situation is not proof that farming is not paying but it is, rather, evidence of some more positive tendencies, for instance, the enlargement of farms beyond the capacity of owners to work them, and the retirement of farmers from active life to the towns and cities of the state.

It appears from the figures presented that about 40 per cent. of farms occupied in Nebraska are by tenants, which is true also of the State of New York. This is a big rural problem of the day, one that concerns the people all over the country. It is the incentive back of a suggestion made by a gentleman interested in the development of Fulton. This man would have organized here a loan society whose purpose in the business world would be to loan money to farmers not for them to buy more land, but to enable them to get the best out of a farm of reasonable proportions. But the corrective influence should not stop with lending money to farmers for the purchase of implements, making improvements to their buildings, buying fertilizers, etc. Interest should be aroused in farm economics, which means that closer relationship ought to exist between the people of the town and the men who till the soil, the union to co-operate in the elimination of boundary lines between communities.

It is good to see the interest aroused everywhere in farm economies. It is good to see those who do not live on farms take an interest in conditions and to note what they are doing to promote the general cause of improving the opportunities of the farmers.

While the new secretary of the Chamber of Commerce has not indicated a policy of bringing about a closer relationship between the people of the town and our rural neighbors, it may be taken for granted that at the right time we shall see a campaign launched such as this section of the state has never before witnessed. In the meantime, let us hope that something tangible may be done to secure a savings and loan society.

RESPECT FOR THE CLOCK

Whitman, the poet, was once asked whether he had read a certain rather frivolous novel, and he answered, "No, I have too much respect for the clock." That was a sharp and piquant way of putting the needed reminder conveyed more prosaically by Matthew Arnold: "Some of us waste all of our time, most of us waste much of it, all of us waste some."

It is certainly appalling to think how much of our time flows emptily away. Therefore most of us do not think of it. Let us hope that wrongful, actually vicious corruption of the hours is checked by something even more serious than respect for the clock; that is, respect for ourselves. But how many minutes go in perfectly futile pursuits, which are harmless perhaps, but which leave nothing to remember, even when they leave nothing to forget! Dawdling over meaningless occupations; vain sojourn in unprofitable places; long chatter about things that we do not care for; days that fade and drift and crumble away, like the flying leaves of autumn—how much of our life is made up of those things and how they shrivel at the mention of respect for the clock!

Even things that in themselves are thoroughly worthy often suffer in the doing because that remorseless tick is not enough respected. There is a swift, efficient, close-girt fashion of accomplishment, and there is a trailing, awkward fashion that makes results tardy and too frequently of no avail.

To be sure, some of us in hurrying America consider the clock too closely, and let its steady march become a torment to us. We rise and dress and eat and work and play by it, and mingle the phantom of its inexorable progress even with our dreams. But the ordinary man, woman, and child needs to be taught respect for many things—not least, respect for the clock.—Youth's Companion.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

That the movement to protect the birds of the United States is stronger than it has ever been is the statement of T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National Association of Audubon Societies, in his annual official report. Mr. Pearson, who is in active charge of the association work, reveals in his report that in the last twelve months progress has been made in the bird protecting laws in six states. A backward step or two, through the removal of bird protecting restrictions, are noted, but the friends of the birds are said to have made marked progress all over the United States. Indication of increasing interest in bird protection is shown, he says, by the establishment of bird clubs in widely scattered communities. He regards this as a "manifestation of the new and widespread interest in inducing birds to come about the home, which has recently developed." Nearly 8,000 local bird classes have been organized during the past year with a membership of more than 150,000 persons. A gift to the association of $20,000 from "a friend of the birds," who will not allow his name to be published, is announced by the secretary.

It is reasonable to suppose that the Monroe doctrine will need to be rewritten somewhat and emphasized when the European war is over. America is being well advertised at present and if peace reigns here, with its usual adjunct of prosperity, while other countries are exhausting themselves, envious, not to say greedy, eyes will be cast westward. The doctrine is usually interpreted as applying to interference by European monarchies with republics already established here. But monarchies have possessions here which may become republics or may fall as prizes to monarchies which we prefer should not succeed the present owners—as, for instance, England and Holland. Mexico and the countries south are deeply interested in our development into a mighty world power. They may or may not remain trusted and complacent as the case now stands. A pan-American alliance in defense of the doctrine restated and up to date might add to its force before the world and at the same time make it no more aggressive than it is now popularly supposed to be.

Mr. Choate should know what he is talking about when he says that the United States is the most hated nation in the world. He served as ambassador to England, where the pulse of the world is taken. Nevertheless the smile which the Europeans put on while borrowing our cash looks just like the kind that won't come off.

'Tis said that kings and emperors and lesser potentates are on the firing line, but not one has yet struck an attitude and shouted: "A horse, a horse! My kingdom for a horse!"

Opera stars are invading the movie stage. Now, if the innovation works backward to the negro minstrels, there will be broad grinning both on and in front of the curtain.

The letter P may stand for "Peace," likewise for "Preparedness." It also leads off in "Push," which would be a good thing behind both of the foregoing desirables.

Of course the railroad heads knew all about the impending car shortage, but the anti-preparedness "noes" got it all over the "ayes" in the directors' councils.

If the immediate future is taken care of by new army plans the boy scouts will do the rest. Ten years hence they will constitute a mature and mighty force.

No sane man will growl at the new wrinkle if laundress or laundry will deliver his starched shirts unbuttoned, thereby sidetracking some profanity urge.

Courting and marrying must have come as a safe and sane distraction from notes to Europe, preparedness plans and the Villa and Carranza muddle.

This country is easily greatest among neutrals; but, then, there are so many of the others, and neutral rights play no favorites either for size or wealth.

About time for the professors to announce a correspondence school to train Mr. Wilson's "citizenry" army right at home.

Black molasses is supposed to be a thing of the past, but these factory pumpkin pies come out an unmistakable brunette.

English is spoken by 150,000,000 people, but there is no telling in how many million ways.

The National Fire Protection association asserts that "a fire occurs every day in some school" in the United States. Another authority says that seventy fires occurred in the first sixty-eight days of the present year. Children are not voluntary inmates of schoolhouses. Their proper guardians have no discretion under the law, for the children of school age must go where the authorities direct. Soon after a memorable school fire disaster had destroyed 173 innocents application was made for a building permit almost to duplicate the structure which caused such frightfulness. Recently three fire horrors took place within ten days. Two were in factories and one in a school. The factory owners were promptly brought to task, as they should be. But operatives walk willingly into factory firetraps in search of wages, while, as has been said, school children have no choice. Horrors deliberately caused merit and often receive the direst punishment. Those due to carelessness, thoughtlessness or indifference are none the less cruel, yet those who are responsible are frequently allowed to make a scapegoat of "accident."

When the cost of the proposed addition to the military establishment is before the people the question of cost per capita of the army will be discussed. On examination it may be found to be greater than in some countries in Europe. We pay the private soldier more than double, perhaps, of the pay of soldiers in the best paid army over there. The subordinate officers are better paid than the men who hold equivalent ranks abroad. Here the captains and lieutenants are taken from among the young men who depend on their earnings for a living. Their pay is fixed to include family expenses. Abroad the rule is to give commissions to those who have private incomes. We support more officers per hundred men than they do in Europe on the theory that there should be really a surplus of officers of the lower ranks, in order that they shall be trained for service in the new organizations which will be called out in time of war.

All kinds of warlike instruments appear among the Christmas toys, from battleships and airships and submarines to the same old airguns, tin swords and tin soldiers. Even the baby boy not to be "raised to be a soldier" will hear the blare of the bugle and the rolling of the drum while the older tots march to battle. In the days of peace this sort of thing would have been taken as a matter of course. The toy to be worth anything would have to be out of the ordinary. Lovers of peace and haters of militarism, however, may take comfort in the hope that the children will really not know what it is all about. The symbols and implements of war will soon be discarded for rattles and dolls and books and sleds and skates.

The passing of a leader like Booker T. Washington punctuates an epoch, but not with a period. The good work will go on, under lesser men, perhaps, but its impetus is too great to be wholly checked.

Among those also who have taken to wearing the Charley Chaplin mustache may be mentioned several of Carranza's bunch, evidence that some Mexicans are Americanizing, all right.

An authority on fads says that the slouch so popular with some young women is to be cut out. Well if the society grin which crops out before the camera would also fade.

Owing to scarcity of the right kind of steel for ribs, umbrellas may go higher. However, that fact won't worry those who have a long reach on rainy days.

An old song ran, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." All the same just when the farmers are the richest ever Uncle Sam's pocketbook is empty.

While putting millions into preparedness against a possible outside foe, it is well not to overlook the foe we have always with us, the white plague.

The German type of "trained citizenry" won't go here, but we do want the training and the citizenry to get together somehow and keep together.

One good thing Booker T. Washington stood for in this age of universal restlessness—that is, "Stay at home—stay on the land."

At the windup, which of the belligerents will take the Balkans as a gift and agree to keep them pacified?

Carnegie may still die poor if he attempts to finance peace against the billions poured out to break it.

The Devil's Sonata.

Tartini, the great violinist, after dining indiscreetly dreamed that he had made a bargain with the devil for his soul. To prove his powers the evil one seized a violin and played a sonata of exquisite beauty. Tartini awoke with the ringing in his ears, committed the music to paper and published it as "The Devil's Sonata."

SEALS HELP HIMSELF

A lad of eleven entered the Anti-Tuberculosis society's headquarters yesterday. He had left school some time ago. Yesterday he saw some of the boys and girls who had been in his schoolroom carrying Christmas seals and he thought he would like to help contribute to the relief of the tuberculous patients in the city. He got some seals from one of the children and sold a hundred of them.

Enthused with success he thought he'd try to sell some for himself. When he reported at headquarters the nurse looked at him and then took him into the clinic, then in session. An examination showed marked signs of tuberculosis, and today little Tony is in the sanatorium starting on a bigger fight than he's ever had before—a fight for health. His hundred seals helped to give him his chance for life.

R[illegible] IS URGED FOR ENGINEERS

Would Hava Laboratories Like Those of Germany.

New York.—Research laboratories the equal of those of Germany are under consideration by Columbia university, according to the report of Dean Frederick A. Goetze of the Graduate Engineering school.

After outlining the successful research work accomplished by Dr. Walter Rittman and Professors Armstrong and Pupin in the field of wireless telephony and telegraphy Dean Goetze's report says:

"There is no doubt that much could and should be done to extend our engineering research and to make it of even greater value to the university and to the industries of our country.

"Many of us are firmly convinced that this can best be accomplished by establishing on a site of ample area easily accessible to the university, but among neighbors who will not be too particular as to the smells and noises which we will create, laboratories adequately equipped for all branches of industrial engineering research and administered by the heads of our engineering departments, to which manufacturers and practicing engineers could turn for the solution of problems which are beyond the scope of their equipment or the capabilities of their force.

"In my mind these laboratories should be patterned after those of the German Reichsanstalt, connected with the Technische Hochschule at Charlottenburg, and located in the outskirts of Berlin.

"If Columbia were to establish laboratories of this kind, equipped with every facility for experimentation and research, with the staff of our technical schools available for consultation and advice; manufacturers and individual experts would be glad to avail themselves of these facilities and to establish research fellowships for solving their industrial and engineering problems.

"The cost will depend largely upon the site, which should be close to tidewater and railroad facilities. We would need at least $500,000 for a start and for extension and endowment later on from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 will be needed."

GIRLS GET BIRD CATCHER.

Wellesley Students Now to Dissect Sparrows Instead of Cats.

Boston.—Wellesley college, the home of beauty and culture, now has an official sparrow chaser. He is John H. Oakes, and he receives $40 a month for catching birds for dissection.

Cats were used formerly at Wellesley for dissecting, but this was discontinued when one of the college janitors was haled into court on the charge of stealing a prize cat. President Ellen Fitz Pendleton was threatened with a summons by Chief of Police Hiram Brown, and cats thereafter were shunned.

Oakes has a number of traps which he places in the fields around Wellesley.

Rare Cactus Blossoms.

Chicago.—A night blooming cactus in the yard of M. G. Peterson at 1419 Emerson street, Evanston, which blooms once every six years, started to flower, was in full bloom in a few hours and then closed for another six years. The family almost missed seeing the plant in full bloom. They were at an amusement park and didn't get home until the blossom started to close. The flower is about ten inches in diameter.

BROKERS IN FARMS TO ESTABLISH OFFICES

Syracuse—Incorporation and establishment of the office of paid secretary were decided upon at a meeting of the Farm Brokers Association yesterday afternoon at the Yates. Syracuse and Oneida were bidders for the permanent headquarters and it was said that Jerome H. Fort, who is secretary, will be in charge. Mr. Fort lives in Oneida.

There were twenty-five members present. They came from Rochester, Auburn, Oneida, Penn Yan, Beacon, Buffalo, Elmira, Canandaigua, Ithaca, Lockport, New York, Potsdam, Ogdensburg, Salmanca, Utica, Geneva, Fulton, Syracuse and other cities and towns.

A. Frank Warren of Rochester, president, was in the chair, F. C. McCarthy of Auburn, vice president and J. A. McLear of Gouverneur treasurer.

Theo rganization, which was formed five years ago, has for its aim the promotion of better business methods in the brokerage of farm properties, to guard agricultural interests by legislation, to improve the market for farm sales and to insure a square deal for both buyer nd seller.

MUSICIANS TO MEET IN SYRACUSE IN JUNE

Syracuse—Plans for the convention of the New York State Music Teachers' Association to be held in this city June 19, 20 and 21 next, were given an impetus last night by an address delivered in Apollo Hall, Clark Music Building, by Frederick Schlieder of New York, presidento f the organization.

All-around musical culture which affected the mind was lacking in this country, it was said. Music could be so classified that it would become an open book. Each person had the harmonic sense which he or she developed along different lines—in law, medicine, theology, music and other professions and occupations. Music had been called a God-given gift, but there was nothing the Lord gave to man that did not need development.

Not until the printed page, the instrument and the individual were combined in a harmonic expression would there be real musical culture.

SUPERVISOR ASKS FOR CLEAN SLATE

Wants Books of Town Audited, That Nothing May Hang Over His Head—A Busy Day.

Oswego—Supervisor Callison, of Oswego Town, wants the books of that town investigated. At the regular meeting of the Board of Supervisors yesterday he introduced a resolution requesting that the Chair appoint a committee of three to go over the Supervisor's accounts for the past eight years and make an examination. In explanation Mr. Callison said that he is to retire from office the last of the year and he simply wants an examination as a matter of personal protection to himself that there may be no afterclap.

The general opinion seemed to be that the investigation was directed towards the books of W. W. Rounds, When the latter turned over his books to Mr. Callison two years ago there was a balance in cash of something like $1,300. The auditors had checked up Mr. Rounds' books and they were considered correct. Later the auditors found that Mr. Rounds had turned over to Mr. Callison $93.70 more than he should and last year an order was made refunding that amount to Mr. Rounds. This year, after more checking and comparing and figuring, the auditors found that Mr. Rounds is entitled to about fifty dollars more and an order for that amount was granted him.

When asked today how it could be possible that his accounts were inaccurate as audited by the board of town auditors. Mr. Rounds said that he did not know; that he was in the habit of paying out his own money to take care of town charges and he presumed it was that way.

After the adoption of the hesolution Mr. Rounds, who was present, was given the privilege of the floor and said that he was glad that the resolution had been adopted. If there was anything wrong with his accounts he didn't know it and if there is he stands ready to make it right.

A Question is Raised

There was a mild sensation in the meeting when the resolution was introduced, as Mr. Rounds was present. F. E. Rounds, who is one of the present auditors, said t hat the books of the town show that there was approximately $140 coming to Mr. Rounds when he went out of office.

The question of the right of the Board of Supervisors to go into the affairs of the town and examine the books was questioned by some of the members and it is not impossible that the State Comptroller may be asked to send and expert here to go over the books. The comittee named by Chairman Siver today is as follows: Messrs. Vincent, Nichols and Inman.

Mr. Parsons presented a petition from the assessors of New Haven correcting the assessment roll. Granted.

Mr. Jackson moved the adoption of the report of the Committee to Settle with the Superintendent of the Poor. Adopted.

Mr. Pierce presented a remittance from the Court of Appeals with an order that $3,314.24 be refund from the money collected for county purposes to the Ontario & Western Railroad company. The matter went over until tomorrow. The court reduced the assessment of the company on lands in this city.

Mr. Wallose moved the adoption on the report of the Committee on Judicial Officers. Adopted.

To Copy Old Maps

By Mr. Parkhurst: Directing the chairman and a committee of three to be named by him be appointed to go over certain old maps in the County Clerk's office with av iew of having copies made of them. Adopted. The committee named was Parkhurst, Jackson and Soule.

John Mosbrugger was appointed elevator boy at the County building at a salary of $9 a week, on motion of Mr. Vant.

Mr. Duane presented a list of land parcels in the county to which the county has acquired and holds title. Over one day.

Mr. Hall presented the superintendent of the poor's report for Hannibal and Mr. Harder a similar report for Parish. Referred.

A barrel of handsome apples, Spies from the orchards of Supervisor Vant of the Town of Volney, was opened today for the committeemen to eat. Adjourned.

When Mr. Rounds was invited to talk and given the privilege of the flour, he not only spoke on the resolution of Callison that was adopted, but he also spoke of the development of things that are of great interest to the people, the trend of high taxes. Eight years ago, he said, the county wasp ractically without debt. Today there are outstanding bonds of the amount of $500,000. Taves, he said, are increasing at leaps and bounds, due to roads, canals, hospitals, etc. He urged retrenchment.

One cigar a day less will pay for electric service. adv

AND AGAIN, THE COUNTRY CHURCH

The Commission on Church and Country Life, a branch of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, is holding a session in Columbus, Ohio. The rural church is undergoing general discussion. The speakers did not confine themselves to simple discussion of the church and its problems, but went so far into the realm of labor conditions on the farm.

There is much of the old-time oratory and patent logic in the statement that "there can be no permanently sound and vigorous life for the nation unless life in the country is vigorous and sound." We have all heard that many times before and it smacks of the flavor of "Way Down East" and the congressional aspirant in the rural ridings raising his voice in behalf of his own candidacy for renomination and re-election.

Let it be admitted that the country is the strength of the nation. That has been preached so long that every one believes it. But the text at hand and before the commission is the country church. What of its ailments? Gifford Pinchot tells the commission that there should be an effective conservation movement, as it would tend to conserve the religious and economic health of the country communities. The conservation movement is already abroad. It has reached into the most isloated districts of the country. It is seen locally in the farm bureau, in the wider movement for agricultural education, in improved rural conditions. But still the country church struggles on and does not seem to prosper. The church cannot take thef unction of the grange, and the agricultural school. It was not born for these utilitarian purposes. But it can be more of a community affair, not a club house, but a meeting place for lecture and entertainments as it was in earlier years.

But back of it all is the fact that there are too many country churches. Until the governing bodies of the denominations represented in the country churches get together and eliminate and consolidate there will be little improvement. There are too many poorly paid and discouraged preachers. There are frequently four churches in a small community that is able to support only one.

It seems to be admitted that there are too many rural churches. Then it is time for reorganization along interdenominational lines.—Watertown Times.

A Doctor's Story

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

One of my patients was a Miss Young, an orphan, whose uncle had called on me to visit her.

I attended Miss Young for some time, during which I not only made no headway in improving her condition, but lost ground. I noticed that whenever I called the nurse was in the sick room and never left it during my visit. One day while I was with the patient, having asked the nurse to get me something from the bathroom adjoining and she was absent a few seconds. Miss Young's face suddenly assumed a pained expression, and she whispered in my ear, "She's killing me." She had barely time to say this and resume her usual expression when the nurse returned.

Of course I gave no sign to Miss Hazard, the nurse, of what had been communicated to me, but I saw at once that something must be done to free my patient from her ministration. I called up Mr. Van Orden, the uncle, and told him over the phone that I was not satisfied with his niece's nurse and would not be responsible for my patient unless she were replaced by another of my own choosing. I received no definite reply, but before my next visit was informed that since the patient had lost ground under my treatment he had decided to call in another physician. My services would no longer be required.

Putting together what my patient had told me and my dismissal at attempting to get rid of the nurse, I made up my mind at once that something was wrong. But I dared not act without more information and resolved to proceed cautiously. I soon came to the conclusion that I had better act with my successor in the case and sent my office assistant to watch the house and discover who had succeeded me. She reported that a recent graduate, a Dr. Vernon, had called at the house, and I at once made an appointment to meet him and put him in possession of all that I knew about the strange condition of affairs.

Vernon, possessing this knowledge, had a great advantage, since it was not known that he had it, and he could thus the better take steps to make more discoveries. We arranged that I should make inquiries as to who the parties were and secure such other information as was possible. Vernon was to do what he could by way of investigation in the sickroom. I learned that Miss Young was an heiress and that her uncle was her guardian till she came to be twenty-one years old, when the estate would pass into her own keeping.

Vernon found means to communicate with the patient by insisting that the nurse get something for him that would require her going to the kitchen, and he learned that the medicine he was giving had a taste that it should not have. He gave Miss Young a vial, which she concealed under the bedclothes, and when about to take a dose she sent the nurse to the bathroom for a glass of water. While she was gone the patient emptied the medicine into the vial, and when the doctor called again he took it away with him.

That evening Vernon and I in my laboratory investigated the contents of the vial and found traces of a slow poison. The secret was out—the guardian was killing his ward. Investigations made by Vernon, who was by this time much interested in the case, as well as his patient, revealed the fact that with Miss Young out of the way Van Orden would be sole heir-at-law to her estate.

The question now arose, What should be our next step? Should we inform the victim of this conspiracy of her danger or have the suspected parties arrested without her knowledge? Vernon told me that his patient was in a nervous condition, bordering on collapse, and recommended that we act without consulting her. To this I assented.

That same morning Van Orden was arrested, and Miss Hazard was called out of the sickroom and also taken into custody. A new nurse whom I had selected was ready to take her place and at once entered upon her duties. Vernon and I were in the house at the time of the arrests and entered the sickroom with the new nurse. The patient saw at once that she had been delivered from the tyranny under which she had been slowly dying and greeted us with a smile of supreme relief. Had I not been a married man I should have been disgruntled at seeing the look she gave Vernon, for it was plain that she had given him her heart.

"Oh, doctor," she said to him when she knew all that we thought best to tell her, "how much I owe you!"

"Where do I come in?" I asked.

"And you, too, of course."

Our patient was not told that an attempt had been made to poison her and that her uncle and nurse had been arrested charged with the crime until she had recovered her health. Her recovery was hastened by the especial attentions, or, rather, the devotion of Dr. Vernon, and before she was informed as to what had occurred they were engaged.

Van Orden jumped his bail and disappeared. Miss Hazard's counsel succeeded in having her acquitted because the prosecution failed to prove that she had any motive for the crime. Nevertheless it was known that her motive was a large share of the fortune her employer was trying to secure, or at least a promise of it.

BUSINESS OF A COMMUNITY.

Business must have a human basis, says Don E. Mowry in the Town Development Magazine. The grade of a business depends upon the grade of its human background. To build up the humanity of a community is therefore the surest way of building up the business of a community. We must analyze carefully the local needs, always taking into account in mapping out the program that undue emphasis must not be placed upon any special activity for any length of time. We must recognize two primary functions, those which are civic and those which are primarily commercial. If undue emphasis is placed upon the civic program the commercial interests will have just cause for complaint of the methods which the commercial organization—the central organization—is employing in the interests of the community in which every one is playing and paying his part.

ORNAMENTAL ELECTROLIER.

Santa Cruz, Cal., Has a Type That Is Attractive and Economical.

When the need for ornamental street lighting in the city of Santa Cruz, Cal., became recognized it was suggested that an inexpensive electrolier could be installed on the main street of the city by sharing the expense equally between property owners and tenants, writes Fred R. Howe, mayor of Santa Cruz, in the American City. It was found that the people were unwilling to pay the price of some of the higher grade types manufactured, and it was therefore decided to make an electrolier of much cheaper design, using black iron pipe with screw joints. After considerable study the design herewith reproduced was adopted.

The electrolier is so constructed that if in the future a more attractive cast iron upright standard is desired it will be necessary only to remove the cross-arm at the top and set the new standard over the remaining pipe. The underground work is first class and will require no further expense.

This type of electrolier has been in service in Santa Cruz for five years and has been so much admired that the Southern Pacific Railroad company has adopted it and is now installing it in the depots between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Three openings are cut in the four inch by eight foot length. One of these is cut six inches above the sidewalk and is made 4 by 6 inches, with a cover 6 by 8 inches which is screwed to the pipe, and this opening is used to connect the electrolier to the underground wires. The other two openings are placed from two to eighteen inches below the sidewalk, according to the position of the underground work—whether it is to be placed on top of the sidewalk or below the gutter line in the street. These lower openings measure 1½ by 6 inches and are used for the introduction of the conduit. The electrolier is placed three feet in the ground and concreted in with a mixture of 5.1.

The underground conduit costs about 6 cents per foot, the cost being governed by the size of the job. Repairing sidewalk and streets costs from 11 to 15 cents per square foot. The approximate cost of the electrolier complete, set up and ready for operation, is from $30 to $32, according to the size of the job and the kind of street. The cost of operating these electroliers is $1 per month for 120 watts on all night and every night service, 1 1-9 cents per light per night, or .025 per kilowatt hour.

City Electrician J. C. Geyer reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, 245 of these electroliers were installed throughout the city, containing 679 forty-watt lamps, using approximately 27.2 kilowatts per hour, or 8,148 kilowatts per month, at a cost of $194 per month.

Course of Civic Lectures.

One of the plans of the Hazleton (Pa.) chamber of commerce for the coming winter is the holding of a course of lectures designed to aid in the upbuilding of the business affairs of the city. Speakers for this purpose will be obtained from the bureau of commercial economics at Washington.

HER LOVE AND FROGS

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The Swamp farm, as it was called, was situated four miles out of Dayton and was owned by the Widow Bliss.

The tin peddler, the sewing machine agent, the book canvasser, the patent right man and many others who came that way saw, admired and were ready to love the owner of the Swamp farm. She admitted to herself that it might be better if she had a good husband, but she had a "nay" for all these men except one. He was a Mr. William Burton. He was a man just about her age and ranked as an old bachelor. Mr. Burton didn't begin as most of the others had. He had the sense to admire the widow without telling her that he admired.

Mr. Burton could talk of soils, crops, swamps, the weather and a hundred other things and never let a hint fall that he intended some day to talk of love and matrimony. The widow mentally pitied him for this, and yet she felt a bit piqued.

Mr. Burton was a surveyor, and his duties called him into the neighborhood of the Swamp farm about once a week. He could probably have made it once in two weeks and perhaps once in four, but it's none of our business. Along about Wednesday in every week the widow would look out of the front door and see Mr. Burton surveying or pretending to. He would look up by accident and see her standing there and would be invited in to drink a glass of fresh buttermilk.

This thing had gone on for a long, long time when he called one day, not to survey her garden, but to sit in the house and talk.

"Widow, I have been coming here a long time," he began.

"And it has tired you out?" she laughed in reply.

"Not a bit. I came today to ask you to be my wife."

"Mr. Burton," replied the widow, "I made up my mind about this marriage question quite a long time ago. I shall marry the man who can tell me how to make money out of my old swamp. When I am sure that he has told me right he may bring in the preacher."

"That old swamp has been a bleak spot for fifty years," he said after a time. "By the way, you don't own all the swamp, do you?"

"No. There's twenty-eight acres of it that belong to Mr. Cooper, but he can't do anything more with his part than I can with mine."

Mr. Burton walked down to the edge of the swamp and back again, and then he sat down and took his head in his hands and thought and thought. By and by he looked up with a bright smile on his face and said:

"Mrs. Bliss, I have got it. I have solved the problem. You are to turn that swamp into a frog farm!"

"Gracious me, but whoever heard of such a thing?" she exclaimed.

"Lots of folks have heard of it. There are half a dozen men in this state who are raising frogs for the market and making a heap of money out of it."

"But I never heard of any one selling frogs," persisted the widow. "Would any one in Dayton eat a frog, much less buy one?

"Not in Dayton," he laughed, "but in New York. They are on the bills of fare at most hotels and restaurants and are considered a great delicacy. They eat only the hind legs."

It was a week later that men and boys called at the Swamp farm with pails and baskets and paper bags.

When the widow had bought 600 big and little frogs and paid out so much money that she had to let her taxes slip by she went down to the swamp one morning to have a look at her "live stock."

Not a frog was in sight this morning, not a big one or a little one. That swamp was absolutely without life.

The widow ran back to the house and arrived there just a minute before Mr. Burton appeared.

"I—I was going to send for you!" she gasped.

"What has happened?" he asked.

"Every frog has disappeared!"

"You don't say!"

"Come along and see for yourself."

He walked along down to the swamp with her, and she heard him chuckling as he walked. Instead of looking over the swamp to see if he could solve the problem he sat down on a log and began to laugh.

"What do you mean, Mr. Burton?" was almost demanded.

"I was to tell you how to make money out of this old swamp."

"Yes, you said you could, but it seems you have only shown me how to lose money instead."

"You are wrong, widow—you are wrong," said Mr. Burton. "You see, there were twenty-eight acres which you didn't own. I bought them. When you had 600 frogs on your side of the swamp I threw a lot of frog food in on my side. Last night your 600 came over the line. They are now my property."

The widow looked at him with mingled amazement and indignation.

"Oh, don't look that way," he laughed. "I am now going to tell you how you may make the money."

"How—how"— she stammered.

"Why, marry the man who owns the 600 frogs!" he replied.

And after about a month she did. She not only made money out of the frog farm, but she got a good husband besides, and that is something that money cannot buy.

Why Santa Lives.

Was there ever a wider or more loving conspiracy than that which keeps the venerable figure of Santa Claus from slipping away, with all the other old time myths, into the forsaken wonderland of the past? Of all the personages whose marvelous doings once filled the minds of men he alone survives.

He has outlived all the great gods and all the impressive and poetic conceptions which once flitted between heaven and earth—these have gone, but Santa Claus remains by virtue of a common understanding that childhood shall not be despoiled of one of its most cherished beliefs, either by the mythologist, with his sun myth theory, or the scientist, with his heartless diatribe against superstition.

There is a good deal more to be said on this subject if this were the place to say it. Even superstition has its uses and sometimes its sound heart of truth. He who does not see in the legend of Santa Claus a beautiful faith on one side and the naive embodiment of a divine fact on the other is not fit to have a place at the Christmas board. For him there should be neither carol nor holly nor mistletoe. They only shall keep the feast to whom all these things are but the outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace.—Hamilton Wright Mabie.

BEAUTIFUL LINES.

MODISH TO A DEGREE.

Cut of tan broadcloth, edged with beaver and smocked at the belt and high collar, this fetching suit gives an ultra result. The apron front is apparently held by four self buttons and verges into military severity. The charming little close turban has a band of worsted roses in pastel shades with gold centers.

Thunder at Sea.

The Astronomical Society of France has again taken up the discussion which has been before it on several previous occasions, and that is the statement that thunder is never heard at sea. The statement was originally attributed to Baron von Humboldt, and it has been frequently questioned, but those who insist that they have heard thunder at sea have also stated that the peals were not so loud as on land. A large number of seamen have been found to agree with the scientist, although it is suggested that the other noises prevailing on shipboard during a storm may be the reason why the thunder often passes unnoticed.

Hen Trickery.

Since Australia is at the antipodes from us the hens there naturally lay best from May to November, contrary to the habit of hens here. It is now suggested that if a hen after her annual laying period in the southern hemisphere were rushed across the equator to the United States she might lay during the rest of the year at the same rate and thus establish a new "record" for a year's production. Still, it looks like a [illegible] trick to play on a poor hen. —Youth's Companion.

HOW TO SMOCK.

Crossbarred dimity is best to learn to smock on, as the lines are a great help in preparing the work. There should be about three spaces to an inch. The part to be smocked must first be gathered into tucks of even size with black thread. After some practice these spaces can be measured with the eye, but at first the crossbarred or dotted material is a big help and time saver. After gathering with strong black thread as many rows half an inch apart as will cover the space that is to be smocked the garment is ready for the actual smocking.

Mercerized floss in medium weight in double thread is the best cotton to use. The twisted cotton single is also effective for coarse work. This floss holds its color and comes in attractive shades. The stitches are made very much like the featherstitch and have the same number of variations. The featherstitch is done toward the sewer, whereas smocking is worked away from the sewer. Every time a new stitch is taken one picks up a tuck previously made by the black bastings. After some practice it will be easy to pick up just the right amount of material from each tuck, but everything depends upon the evenness of the spacing in the beginning. The different stitches are made by changing the thread from one side of the needle to the other, just as in featherstitching. The combination of stitches with themselves and with each other is so endless that no two garments need ever be alike, and the combining of colors and materials makes this work very fascinating.

It is possible to buy patterns for smocked dresses for adults and children. It should also be noted that smocking will take two and a half times as much material as will appear when the work is done—that is, in order to obtain half a yard of smocked material a yard and a quarter must be used. Of course this can be gathered up into a smaller space or stretched to a larger one, but that is the average. The materials used for a grown person's dress must be soft, for the fullness around the waist will not look well in stiffer materials. A soft yielding silk and even chiffon are best adapted for this kind of garment. The advantages of smocked dresses for children's wear are numerous. The fullness will leave room for growth, and the dresses may be worn for a long time.

Not a Bad Way.

Menu For a Christmas Supper.

Bouillon in Cups.
Creamed Mushrooms.
Alligator Pear and Grapefruit Salad.
Wine Jelly. Nut Cake.
Coffee.

Alligator Pear and Grapefruit Salad.—Peel, cut in quarters and remove the seeds and pith from two good sized alligator pears and cut them in slices. Cut a grapefruit in half across the sections. Remove the seed pockets and seeds. Loosen the fruit from the rind by running a sharp knife all along the inside, then lift out the sections with a spoon. Mix the grape pulp and slices of the pears lightly in a salad bowl. Pour over the whole a French salad dressing with less than the usual amount of vinegar and use paprika. Serve with cream cheese and thin toasted wafers.

Creamed Mushrooms.—This recipe is particularly adapted to cooking in a chafing dish. Prepare the mushrooms by washing and peeling. Take two rounded tablespoonfuls of butter for each pound of mushrooms and melt in the blazer. Add the mushrooms and cook slowly for ten minutes. Add half a cupful of cream, simmer five minutes, season and serve on toast.

The Artistic Bedroom.

When a bedroom or small dressing room is papered with anything but a plain or neutral paper, bright colored or flowered chintz should never be used, but often a little color is needed to add tone to the room.

In a case of this kind one of the new bedspreads which are so pretty and easily made is just the thing to give the necessary color.

Select a plain white spread of good quality and rather heavy.

Cut from chintz a bunch of roses or a spray of gay colored flowers and baste one in each corner, with a larger one for the center.

Sew to the spread and finish the raw edges with a fine featherstitch or with a long and short buttonhole stitch.

This idea can be carried out for scarfs to cover the dressing table and bureau of the scarf of linen to fit the top of each and finish the edges with a scallop or a hem. Finish this with the stitch that was used on the spread. Cut out the flowers and applique to the edges of the scarf. Bunches of the same flowers can be added to the corners of the white curtains.

Condescension.

"What air them kitchenettes I hear tell of in the cities?" asked Deacon Hyperbole Medders, the somewhat honest agriculturist.

"They're the places, Uncle Hy," explained Upson Downs, his city nephew, "in which is molded or cast or somehow produced a flat dweller's daily round of mealettes."—Judge.

Velveteen Coat Trimmed With Beaver

Designed by Lane Bryant, New York.

THIS coat is elegantly made of finest quality black or navy velveteen. The wide shawl collar and long revers are trimmed with bandings of beaver fur. The sleeve has deep turnback cuffs. Large buttons of self material trim the cuffs and belt. The collar may be worn flat or rolled high close to the neck. The coat is lined with peau de cygne and warmly interlined. This coat can be carried out somewhat more simply in cloth, still retaining the fur trimming.

Drapery or a loose panel falling from the waist line gives a pleasing effect to a figure that is very full in the back. The short waisted woman must avoid cutup effects. Long, unbroken lines are her salvation. Neither should she adopt a contrasting waist and skirt. She should wear dresses instead of shirt waists or else have them both match in color. Keep the shoulder line narrow, and in selecting a suit, whether you are tall or short, have the coat come well over the hips. Have it arranged like this: One-third coat and two-thirds skirt or two-thirds coat and one-third skirt.

The overslender woman can wear all kinds of fluffy things under her gowns to build up the figure. She may choose rough goods, large figures, checks, taffeta silks and crisp materials. The thin woman must not wear skimpy, clinging clothes, narrow stripes running up and down nor deep yokes that give a dragged look over the bust. She may wear, if tall, a large hat.

A red haired woman cannot expect to be ravishing in pink or reddish purple, as either tends to heighten the color of her hair. Navy blue may be used sparingly, but brown is the color for the auburn haired woman. Some shades of sage green are becoming, and gray (if the complexion is clear), black and white.

A brunette with good coloring can wear any color, but if sallow let her forego purple, green and red. Blue eyes and a poor complexion are improved by dull Alice blue. This is the best color to freshen the complexion of one who is no longer young.

Black and white ornaments continue in high favor, and some very beautiful specimens of this kind of jewelry are shown. Notable is the checkerboard pattern, achieved by mounting squares of cut jet in alternation with squares of closely set diamonds or rhinestones in a delicate silver setting. Silver, by the bye, is the craze in high class jewelry now—silver and the more expensive platinum—and the pure white lights of diamonds set in silver are considered more distinguished than the yellow glint produced by gold.

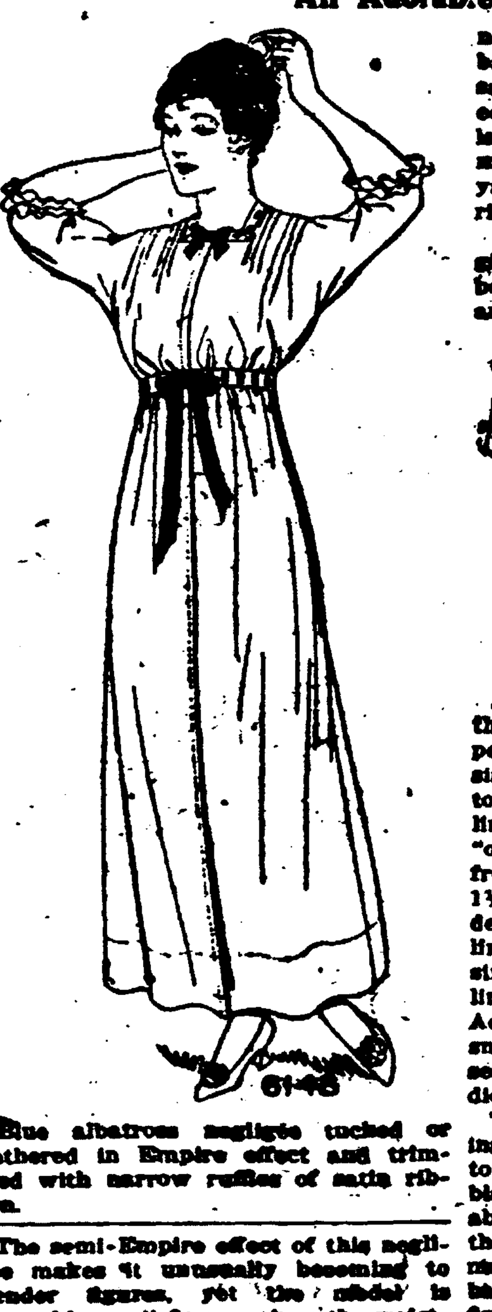
Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

An Adorable Negligee.



Blue albatross negligee tucked or gathered in Empire effect and trimmed with narrow ruffles of satin ribbon.

The semi-Empire effect of this negligee makes it unusually becoming to slender figures, yet the model is adaptable to all figures since the waistline may be regulated as desired. The negligee is fashioned of pale blue albatross trimmed with frills of pleated satin ribbon. The neck may be finished in square effect with a border of lace or with a collar of plain silk. In medium size the robe requires 4½ yards 36-inch material, with 1½ yards ribbon for the frills.

A dainty negligee makes a charming gift at all times. To fashion this one, begin by closing the under-arm, sleeve and shoulder seams as notched. Tuck the front and back as indicated by perforations; then stitch tucks the desired width. Hem the front and tuck to form a heading at Empire waistline, creasing on crossline of double "oo" perforations; stitch 1½ inches from fold; turn tuck upward and stitch 1¼ inch from fold; stitch a casing underneath front and back along stitching line of tuck and insert elastic. If desired, omit tuck and gather on crosslines of single small "o" perforations. Adjust belt over gathers, centers even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam; large "O" perforation in belt indicates center-front.

There are ways of further elaborating the design without adding greatly to its cost; for instance, a band of black silk or satin may be stitched about the bottom of the skirt above the hem and the plain turn-down collar may be black satin overlaid with white batiste. The notes of [illegible] contrast figure prominently in boudoir garments this season and are most effective.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

A coat in which style and service are attractively combined is this model in light English mixture. Large bone buttons, sufficiently decorative to be distinctive, yet not fanciful, adorn the front and sleeves. There are also large pockets and deep cuffs. A coat of this style can easily be elaborated upon by the addition of velvet or satin revers or cuffs. And then, as the final word in decoration, one has recourse to the fashionable pelts. In medium size the design requires 4 yards 54-inch material.

Pictorial Review Coat No. 6376. Sizes, 32 to 46 inches bust and 16 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

To Relieve the Itch.

"I do not recall whether Dante in his 'Inferno' depicts any of the damned as tormented with the itch," writes Dr. William P. Cunningham, assistant dermatologist of Harlem hospital and clinical assistant at the Skin and Cancer hospital, in an article in the New York Medical Journal. "If not," he continues, "he failed to cover the subject properly, for if there is one sensation calculated to drive its victims to the point of insensate fury it is pruritus."

The secret of success in treating itch is in covering the affected parts with salve and keeping them covered. It does not much matter what the ointment is so long as it "gives an unctuous coating to the supersensitive skin and excludes air, moisture and friction." A thorough coating of stearate of zinc is excellent.

Ferdinand's Crown.

The king of Bulgaria has a crown that he has never worn in public. In 1902 "Prince" Ferdinand thought the time ripe for proclaiming himself king and ordered a diadem from Brussels. The "concert of Europe" ordained otherwise, and the crown was relegated to a cupboard until 1908, when the prince was elevated to kingship. Austria, however, prohibited Ferdinand's coronation, so that he has not yet worn the crown publicly.

Dutch New Guinea.

A Dutch expedition has recently finished mapping Dutch New Guinea, which is about fourteen times as large as the Netherlands and includes the greater part of the island of Papua, in the south seas. Primitive men, equipped with crude weapons and implements of stone and flint, were encountered. Some were wild and warlike, while others were [illegible] and offered no resistance to the [illegible] investigations.

Don't Let Fatigue Get You!

The fine art of discovering their physical limitations is something all women should strive to attain. Half the cases of nervous prostration, of disease of mind or body, arise from the absence of this very bit of knowledge. "Stop just short of being tired," is the advice which all physicians give their patients. This is the ounce of prevention idea that stands before the folly of the pound of cure, and yet not one woman in ten pays any heed to it.

The sensation of fatigue is the indication of your particular limitations. Give up the theater and supper in the evening if you have had a hard day and are feeling tired at night. "I know I ought not to do it, but I just can't resist," is the criminal confession of most women.

Any doctor in any city, town or country will tell you that what women need is not medicine, but consciences—consciences that make them stop short of being tired. "All we can do," the doctors say, "is to patch up what they persist in tearing down. We find it almost hopeless to arouse them to a sense of their duty toward their husbands, families and themselves in this respect, so we have learned to shrug our shoulders and patch 'em up.

"Now, fatigue actually means a decrease of vital force. If up to the point of feeling tired you have required all the vital energy you have been using to keep you in good physical condition it is a foregone conclusion that your limit has been reached when the first signs of fatigue begin to show themselves. That is the time for you to drop everything and rest. Sleep that has relaxation in it is the best aid to insure it.

"Not one woman in a hundred knows how to rest. Despite the fact that chair backs and chair arms are provided to coax the sitter into relaxation, the average woman seats herself upon a chair with the grim determination of helping the chair hold her in place. How many women of your acquaintance know even how to let their hands drop idly in their laps? Not many! The strain is felt all along the arms. They are not left there in the laps, but actually held there by the gripping power of its master, the will.

"It is not massage that really keeps a woman youthful looking; it is nothing more than the relaxation that she is forced into by the temporarily superior power of the will of the one treating her. Youth and beauty and charm are not only born of relaxation and composure, but are kept alive by it. No power on earth can keep youth alive when old age in the form of unrest of mind and body is persistently working against it.

"Study relaxation in everything, how to walk without weariness, to sit without restraint and to live without haste. A lot of cares that you have gripped frantically have needed no grip at all. Most of the 'worries' you have are creations of pure imagination. You have lived through a day of them and found them turned into jokes. Most things don't matter at all. Most of your losses have been just inconveniences, but you have turned them into tragedies and lasting griefs by the grip you have had upon them."

HIGH'S MEN GET GOOD TRAINING

Road Stunts Show Marked Beneficial Results---Aggies Should Feel Effects of the Work.

During the past week, Jay Hollingsworth, coach of the High school basketball team, has had every man on the squad run from the high school building to the chocolate works and return, a distance of more than two miles. The players take the trip in their basketball togs every night with the exception of the evenings they practice on the court at the City Hall.

The result of this training has been apparent in the practice lately as every man is working up the speed and endurance which is necessary to be able to work consistently in a forty-minute game.

It is likely that in tonight's game at the City Hall, the Morrisville Aggies, who are to be the high school boys' opponents, will be at a loss to evade the guards on the local team, as Coach Hollingsworth has confined most of his efforts towards developing this department of the game.

Wallace may occupy the sidelines and Webb take his place at center. Frawley, who has been on the second squad, will, if the change is made, go in as guard with Thompson. With O'Brien and Martin fixtures at the forward positions, and Webb, Frawley and Thompson, Fulton High is represented by a strong team and they should make a good showing.

After the basketball game, the visiting team will be the guests at a dance to be given in the Library.

INCREASING THE INCOME TAX

It is good economics but bad politics to permit the taxgatherer's hand to be plainly seen and felt by the contributors.

This, however, is what Secretary McAdoo proposes in his annual report, wherein he recommends retention of the emergency stamp taxes and the duty on sugar and an increase in the taxes on corporate and individual incomes.

Here is where the shoe will pinch the greatest number of persons. The Secretaary proposes to lower the amount of exempt income to $3,000 for contributors who are married and to $2,000 in the case of the unmarried.

Last year 357,515 individnals paid an income tax. The proposed lowering of the basis would reach a vastly greater number of persons who earn incomes so modest that they are now exempt. Mr. McAdoo recommends also "a larger and more effective field force for the investigation and checking up of income tax returns," which means an extension of the inquisitorial functions of the collectors.

In addition, the Secretary suggests an increase in the rates as now imposed. The proposed taxes on automobiles and gasoline and upon iron and steel products would directly and immediately affect a small number of persons in comparison with the great army of citizens who would feel the taxgatherer's grip upon these limited incomes.

"Pluck the geese but don't make them squawk" was the edict of one famous monarch to his tax gatherers. There is certain to be a great deal of "squawking" if the proposed increaaes in the income tax are adopted. It is true that direct taxes, which the contributors clearly perceive and feel, are in a theoretical way conducive to economy by inciting them to take greater interest in public expenditures and to demand retrenchment. Hence it may be repeated Mr. McAdoo's proposal is good economics but bad politics.—N. Y. Herald.

COASTING ON TABOO STREETS MUST STOP

Unless coasting on the streets prohibited by the recent ruling of Mayor Fox ceases at once, the police will make arrests. This warning has been issued following the complaint of a number of pedestrians who have been in danger of being struck by speeding sheds on the sidewalks. Several complaints were received yesterday at police headquarters and a patrolman was detailed to investigate.

Chief Dyer asserts that the mayor's ruling will be strictly enforced and that further complaints of violations will bring about arrests.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

The Civic and welfare activities have given to the commercial organizations of today a permanent strength, vitality and interest far beyond what the average member gives credit for.

The Public opinion of the people of Fulton is going to be changed by the Chamber of Commerce and this public opinion of our citizens will no longer permit men to rest easy, if they do not contribute something to the welfare of their community. It was Fulton, it was this City, that in part created their wealth and standing in our City. The debt they owe is a personal one and the time is coming through development of civic conscience and the sense of civic responsibility by the Chamber of Commerce when men of wealth and ability will vie with one and another in public service without financial compensation.

The paramount work of the Chamber of Commerce will be to secure the co-operation of business men in public service. A man is never truly interested in any movement until he has become a part of it. When the time comes (and that time is not far distant) that men of affairs generally take an active part in commercial organization work and become interested in the community problems, there will no longer be danger from lack of co-operation and—there is an appalling lack of co-operation in the City of Fulton.

If you are keeping a big store, you know very well that you are not able to run the business alone; you need the co-operation of your employees, and when these employees do not make good, you dismiss them. Now, why should you not make good and co-operate with the Chamber of Commerce and make Fulton better, bigger and more prosperous?

Trade at home, because you earn your money here. Sears Roebuck or other mail-order houses are NOT paying the subscriptions for your Churches. [illegible] time, but you don't [illegible] the compliment by trading with them. Let's get that spirit of brotherhood in us for once and you will be surprised what it will mean. Can't you see that when the merchants are doing a bigger business they can give more for your enterprises?

Fulton, first, last and all the time; don't talk Syracuse or Chicago, leave that to the IGNORANT ones; you are too enlightened to make such big mistakes.

A pessimist is a bane to the community, but an ad in a foreign paper or an order to a mail-order house is Robbery, because you send Fulton's good money to a TOTAL STRANGER. Remember this and act accordingly.

Co-operation is the law of City building. Health and happiness and harmony breed content. The town knocker is a product of the devil's industry.

Follow the Fulton flag. Talk Fulton, think Fulton, dream Fulton, act a la Fulton, cheer for Fulton, patronize Fulton made goods and Fulton merchants. Tell us what you want and we will do our very best to get it for you in Fulton or through a Fulton man. Be true to yourself; you owe that much to your own personality and if you are true to yourself, you will be true to Fulton, because that's the place where you LIVE, EAT YOUR DAILY BREAD. Without that daily bread, you are a mere nothing.

Fulton, first, last and all the time.

* * *

Watch the Chamber of Commerce. Don't talk on the corners, but come and see us and you will be surprised what a little talk sometimes can do.

Every dollar spent in Fulton is a BLESSING to all the Citizens.

PROHI. OFFICIALS TO BE ELECTED TUESDAY

The Prohibitionists of the county will meet here next Tuesday in the Baptist church, for the purpose of electing and re-electing their officials. The organization meeting will be held in the church diningroom at 1 o'clock, and in the evening a monster mass meeting will take place, to which everybody is invited.

A leading feature of the day's exercises will be the appearance and a address of the Rev. Dr. Babcock, pastor of the Park Baptist church, Utica. Dr. Babcock will address all sessions of the conference. He is announced as one of the most eloquent and forceful speaker of Northern New York.

O. C. Breed Explains Why He Refused to Produce Records to Court of Claims, Thus Bringing Down Censure of State's Press Bureau Upon Fulton's Interests.

Witnesses who took the stand in behalf of the claim of the Battle Island Paper company denounce in severe language the wholly unusual and unfair attitude maintained toward Fulton's interests by a state-paid news correspondent who attended the trials in Syracuse and Utica. The witnesses aver they could not and would not object to unbiased reports of their evidence being submitted for publication, but in fact that deliberate and wilful falsehoods were paraded before readers' eyes is cause for a high mark of indignation.

Mr. O. C. Breed, hydraulic engineer, of this city, replies in this issue to the work of the State's news coloring artist. Mr. Breed says:

Editor Fulton Times:

I notice in your issue of 10th inst, under heading, "Paper Co. Case is Finished,' an article from the "Utica Observer", reporting incidents at the hearing before Judges Rodenbeck and Ackerson.

I wish to say that the facts as stated are substantially correct, so far as they go. Had the state-paid press agent from Albany, who was in constant attendance at Syracuse been as careful in stating "Facts and occurrences" which were not facts at all and which occurrences never transpired, there would have seemed less bias and prejudicial coloring than was present. This press agents' findings were published in the Syracuse papers, who, when visited by Battle Island Co.'s counsel, disclaimed any intention to misrepresent or color and further volunteered to [illegible] suggest.

In refusing to produce privately taken records pertaining to Oswego river, at entirely my own expense and effort, I claimed exclusive ownership thereof, and was entirely within my rights in refusing to hand those records taken at Fulton over to counsel for State for some purpose unknown or concealed.

I offereed nothing as matters of record that was not taken literally from the annual reports of the State Engineer, and based all my conclusions and findings, wholly on State records. Every sheet offered in evidence contained a detailed statement of its origin or source, and no one knew this fact better than State's counsel. Should there be found any misquotation from the State records, all such are subject to correction on discovery; in fact, the books and the annual reports of the State Engineer for the several years considered, were themselves placed in evidence. I believe that State counsel in discrediting or reflecting upon the integrity of the published records of the State Engineer, left sure foundation and was treading on thin ice.

At the time of demand for my water records taken at Fulton, and my refusal to produce, I thought it might be out of curiosity or to annoy, it has since occurred to me that, the prime object was to get possession of data that might be used in future against Fulton manufacturers, should any of them receive damage from the State Acts and makec laim for compensation. I am a believer in Fulton, and know Fulton is proud of its manufacturers, and without going into differences between employers and employees, it is safely stated, "That when manufacturers thrive, times are good, and that when manufacturers are pinched, Fulton suffers in every legitimate branch." While I [illegible] not sover for Fulton manufacturers, I do not feel willing to aid—State or anyone else— in subjecting them to unnecessary annoyance. We all have troubles.

Respectfully yours,

O. C. BREED.

Senator Lodge Calls for Investigation of Submarine Activities

Washington—The administration is embarked upon a desperate effort to force a complete settlement of the submarine controversy both with Germany and Austria.

As a first step in this effort a determination is being professed and advertised by officials here to force a breach of diplomatic relations with Austria unless prompt satisfaction is given by Austria to the full demands of the United States. This aggressive intention with regard to Austria has been adopted, it might be said, primarily for the purpose of affording a demonstration to Germany of the serious intentions of the United States in seeking a settlement of the controversy with Germany, chiefly a settlement of the Lusitania case.

Since such strong words have been used in past notes to Germany that stronger language could not now be found, the administration has determined to supplement strong words with action. But in taking action against Austria, it has found, or considers it has found, still one more step short of the plunge to an open breach with Germany.

It now has become politically imperative for the administration to force a settlement with Germany. Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, senior minority member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, today introduced in the Senate a resolution calling for an investigation into the circumstances of the attacks upon steamships by submarines and of the administration's course in handling these issues. With such an investigation pressing, it becomes obvious that unless the administration obtains some substantial concesions from Germany, as well as from Austria, the inspiring notes of President

New York.—The trail of a $58,000 bribery fund, hit upon by the legislative investigating committee, is leading toward some one in the Public Service Commission, according to Senator Thompson, chairman of the committee.

"There is no doubt about the trail being plain enough, but we have not come to the end and are not prepared to say anything about it," said Mr. Thompson.

Information thus far obtained relates to $58,000 believed to have been used in connection with a contract for the Fourth avenue subway, Brooklyn. Many curious circumstances surround the contract. The lowest bid was not accepted; one firm was obviously given an advantage and some of the officials in the Public Service Commission opposed the proceeding. More than $1,000,000 was involved.

The investigating committee has spent much time in the last few days trying to trace the fund in its numerous ramifications. Several witnesses have been examined. Senator Thompson said he had obtained corroboration on two important points. Two witnesses whose testimony is essential are out of the city, but are expected to return soon.

This is practically the only subject remaining before the committee for investigation. The inquiry was expected to end yesterday, but will be continued possibly through next week, waiting for developments in the "bribery fund case."

Charges against Commissioners Robert Colgate Wood and G. V. S. Williams will be prepared within the next day or two. enator Thompson said that committee's case against the two officials is almost completed, and that charges demanding their removal will be filed with the Governor next week.

Little progress was made at the inquiry yesterday. Commissioner Wood not only refused to answer questions, but gave notice that, acting on the advice of his counsel, John R. Stanchfield, he was not going to give the committee any more information about his personal affairs.

This led to a lively tilt between Assemblyman Callahan, the new member, and Senator Thompson. The Assemblyman declared that Senator Thompson was unfair in his questioning, and was going far beyond his authority, to which the Senator replied that Mr. Callahan was trying to bring politics into the investigation.

URGE SAVING IN JINGLES

The banking institutions and savings banks in all parts of the country are starting campaigns to educate boys and girls, men and women to be thrifty. The movement is by no means confined to the east, where the banks are taking up thew ork systematically The west is probably more active than the east. Some banks are pointing out that the present is the most opportune time for profitable savings in many years. "A dollar saved today will be worth more than $2 saved five years from now," reads one of the notices.

The "Mother Goose Bankbook" is one of the most unique appeals to thrift. It is a neat little pamp' and jingles are employed to impart the lesson of saving. Here are some of the jingles:

The king was in his counting house,
Adding up his bills,
The queen was in the market place,
Buying lace and frills.

The maid was in the savings bank
Blushing like a rose,
Depositing her savings
Before the bank should close.

Sing a song of sixpence —
Just yourself to thank—
Four and twenty dollars
In the savings bank.

When the account is opened
Put a dollar in—
That's the way to get a start
If you want to win.

Jack Grimes could save his dimes,
His wife could save a penny;
Betwixt the two, they richer grew,
Yet lived as well as any.

SICK MAMMA HELPED CAUSE

Little Boy's Consumptive Mother Inspired Red Cross Seal Sale

The little boy said that he wanted 10 cents' worth of Red Cross Christmas seals. The rich woman was buying 50 cents' worth and the lad seemed impatient.

"Just a minute," counseled the clerk in charge.

"But I must get back to my mamma. She's sick, but she wants the seals just the same," announced the lad with a show of spirit.

The rich woman turned to look at him. He was a sweet faced youngster, with sparkling eyes, who seemed not to mind that his suit was not as warm as it might be.

"You say your mamma is ill?" she asked.

"Yes," he said in a tone that indicated an acquaintance with suffering beyond his years. "She's got consumption, but she said she was going to take a whack at it by buying the seals. How can she take a whack at it with the Seals?"

"You had better give me more seals instead of the change for this five dollar bill," she said to the clerk. Then to the lad she remarked.

"You tell your mamma that she has taken a bigger whack at tuberculosis than she thought."

There is no need to point the moral.

The seals are on sale everywhere.

"Who is satisfied is well paid." Let the Evening Times Press satisfy you with your next job of printing.

LIGHT IN THE WINDOW

Christmas this year in Fulton should be distinctive in one way at least over that of any other Christmas. The dawning civic spirit, like the bright star in the East, casting its enlightening influence down through the dark vistas of a turbulent past; brings a message of cheer "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Whenever occasion has arisen or does arise for berating an individual or group of people for the lack of an exchange of modern civilization's courtesies undoubtedly the level headed observer has usually wound up his conclusion with the thought that if people understood there would be less bitterness, less cause for jealousies and more effort in charitable thinking and acting—the two being inseparable.

So on Christmas eve figuratively speaking Fulton will place the lighted candle in the window, in the understanding of better things tobe. The Chamber of Commerce under the direction of Secretary Hollenga will be in charge of ceremonies. The directors of the chamber in the months to come have a task by no means small, and in recognition of their unselfish services deserve the unstinted aid of every member of the chamber, besides that of every other citizen of Fulton. Let it be borne in mind that "knocking" is the lesser evil when indifference sits in the foreground.

Indifference is the spokesman of ignorance; it is mental stagnation, and sounds the death knell of progress.

Keep enthusiastic; set the ball of fun a-rolling, and lend a hand at Fulton's first Christmas tree. Talk about it; plan to see it; make it Fulton's guiding star.

INFLUENCE OF CHRISTMAS

We are rapidly approaching the season of religious suggestion, the hour of domestic happiness, the great Christian event—Christmas.

Men who move the wheels of the world with the force of their influence, men who delve in the mines, the doers of the world—all preserve childlike thoughts at Christmas time.

The man who cannot see the powerful lessons in Christmas living and in Christmas giving is either envious, sad, or overweighted by the sense of his own importance on earth.

When we feel that Christmas life is in the air, we are, ourselves, in the atmosphere of wholesome thoughts.

When a man sets the hands on his heart with the dial of Christmas time, he is pretty nearly right.

When we put our duty ahead of us, and our faults behind us, we are holding out our hands to help others.

My suggestion to you is to put your book of complaints away, and begin today a new page, a new set of rules on how to be happy.

One man whom I know very well started out not over four years ago to treat others right, and long before he suspected it the world began to pay him in his own coin. He does not wait for Christmas to be generous with the faults of his friends, or to be generous with his gifts of good-will. He finds so much satisfaction at Christmas time that he keeps up the spirit throughout the year.—The Silent Partner.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

The members of the Chamber of Commerce of any municipality exercise a very potent influence in the growth and development of the industrial and commercial side of the city. Membership in such an organization means acquaintance, association and co-operation, extending the field for business exchange, for new organizations of capital, and for general business development within the city itself. At the same time, a powerful Chamber of Commerce, of large and active membership, invites new industries, new business of all sorts, attracts the active, wide-awake man to the city, and soon shows a remarkable growth of population and a multiplicity of smokestacks.

The campaign now being conducted by the Chamber of Commerce for new members, when only four days old, has already added 200 new members to the rolls. A ten-day campaign should add 1,000. The Chamber, already one of thel argest and most progressive in the country, is ambitious to number in its membership every available man in Buffalo, and it would be a splendid thing for Buffalo as well as for Buffalonians if that end was attained.—The Buffalo Times.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Congressmen are reported as being at last awake to the fact that when voters of the West are a political force with which they must reckon.

A Representive of a southern state when asked over the telephone recently to give his position in regard to the woman suffrage amendment gasped when reminded that there were four million women voters and ninety-one electoral votes from suffrage states. The next morning, so the story goes, he rang up very early and asked in anxious tones, "Did you say four million?"

"The most crushing retort ever administered to those who object to women voting because they are supposed not to be able to fight," so runs the interview with Colonel George Harvey in London which was cabled to the New York Tribune, "is the fact that British women are doing a greater share in fighting the enemy at the present moment than even the men. On all sides I am informed that they are doing better work in munition making, even where physical strength is required, than the men."

The Dutch government introduced on November first a bill to revise the constitution. The purpose of the revision is to extend the suffrage to both men and women who have reached the age of twenty-three and are not excluded by certain disabilities.

The point made by the recent statement of The Consumers' League dealing with the necessity of preventing the recurrence of such tragedies as the Brooklyn factory fire of November 6 and the Triangle fire of some years ago, is the need of women as well as men on the New York State Industrial Commission. Fire protection laws are adequate, says the statement, but the provision for their efficient administration is not.

The Modern Columbus, is the title given Premier Asquith by Alice Duer Miller in the New York Tribune, because he has announced, in discussing the heroism of Miss Cavell ,that there are thousands of women throughout the dominion of the Crown as brave as she, and a year ago he did not know it.

"And something tells us," adds Mrs. Miller, "that Mr. Asquith will forget it again as soon as it becomes a question of giving votes to women and not merely pretty words."

The Amateur Athletic Union, which has sanctioned no atheletic events in which women competed, has at last recognized that women are made of muscle as well as sentiment, and will in the future approve and record athletic events in which women compete alone and in which both men and women compete.

STATE PROSECUTES RETAIL MILK DEALERS

Albany—On November 29th, two cases were prosecuted by the Department of Agriculture in Municipal Court, Second District, Bronx, in which the defendants were fined one hundred dollars each for violation of section 55, chapter 651 of the agricultural law. The violations complained of were based upon purchases of milk from producers, without the defendants having first obtained a license under the above mentioned section.

It is the intention of the department to prosecute all dealers who violate this law. While the law was originally enacted for the protection of producers of milk, it is also a protection for reputable dealers who comply with the law and pay their bills against the competition of dealers who seek to evade payment of their bills contracted for with the producers in then pstate districts.

A strict compliance with the law by all milk dealers will be insisted upon by the department.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

That "nothing need be wasted" was demonstrated by a Western railroad agent at a transfer station where much grain was loaded. He constructed a rat-proof bin at a convenient place and began the systematic saving of grain recovered in the sweeping of the empty cars at the loading platform. He also collected any grain that might be spilled from cars in bad order. This grain was sold every little while and the money received from it turned into the railroad company. Of course the grain, being damp and not strictly clean, could be sold only for chicken feed, but it brought 80 cents per hundred pounds and amounted to $267.55 in four months.

If all the little leaks in the household and business were taken care of in America in this way the saving would be a very considerable item, and thrift would become a system, not a make shift for some and a religion with the very few.

Saving money is only one aspect of thrift. To be thrifty of one's time, health, energy and ability is just as important as to be a saver of money. But laying aside a certain amount of money each day, week or month is of great value, particularly so with the young, as it means much in character building.

Just at this time we are given an illustration of the value of thrift and a very good lesson for those who would begin a life of sensible frugality. In the great city of Chicago the sum of one million dollars has been saved this year by boys and girls and men and women, too. who wanted to lay aside "something for Christmas."

For almost fifty weeks they have been putting their pennies in the banks, and they ar e now about to get back a tidy little sum with 3 per cent interest added. To be sure, they saved for the purpose of spending, still they saved once. and found how easy it was to get along without the money they put to work, and the chances are they will save again.

One little boy put five cents in the bank as the amount of his first deposit; the following week his deposit was ten cents; the third week fifteen cents, and so on, until he will shortly draw out $64.21. After his first five cents wasp ut aside, boy-like, he wanted to "see it grow." Now he has not only learned how to save, but he has also learned how to do without unnecessary things.

A young woman started by depositing $2.50 the first week. Each week thereafter she deposited 5 cents less, and at the end of fifty weeks she will draw $64,75; or, perhaps, she will regard this as the nucleus of a larger savings account and leave it in the banks for an investment. The boy who put in 2 cents the first week, 4 cents the next, 6 cents the next, etc.; will have $25.66 to his credit, and the one who started the first week with 1 cent and increased it a cent a week will have $21.62 and interest.

Whole office forces have joined these Christmas clubs through the recommendation of one of their number, and thus the thrift spirit grows.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

(Compiled by Local Union.)

Officers of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad are said, by the Des Moines Capital, to employ detectives armed with cameras to take a photograph of every employe who is seen drinking liquor, and a number have been discharged as a result. Whisky as "first aid to the injured" has been forbidden by the chief medical examiner.

The sale of intoxicating liquor upon all Denver & Rio Grade railroad trains will cease after January 1, 1916, when Colorado becomes dry territory. This is the statement given to the press by N. W. McAbee, superintendent of the dining car service of the railroad. The order will apply also to trains operating in Utah and New Mexico, which are not prohibition states. It is said that other railroads with Colorado connections are contemplating abandoning the sale of all liquor after January 1.

The manager of the Boise (Idaho) brewery is rapidly adapting its buildings to a change of business, in anticipation of the going into effect on January 1 of the prohibition law. After that time it will manufacture soft drinks and fountain supplies, and will maintain a produce and cold storage department. It is reported by the Boise Statesman that at least eight of the twenty-one saloons now operating in Boise will go into the soft drink business.

The annual banquet of the Philadelphia Real Estate Board, to be held next January, will be teetotally dry. That is to say, all alcoholic beverages will be tabooed, but grape juice, orangeade and other non-alcoholic drinks will flow freely.

A resolution to that effect was passed by members of the association, says the North American. This is the first time in the history of the board that this step has been taken. The banquet is a gala affair each year and men of national prominence are always present.

Out of eighteen electoral constituencies into which Newfoundland is divided, eleven are reported to have given more than the required forty per cent of votes for prohibition. The vote for the amendment is more than four time as large as the vote against it. Only 5,348 votes were polled against the measure and 24,965 in favor of it. The election was held on November 4, but because of stormy weather it was impossible to collect the ballot boxes in the St. Barbe district along the Labrador coast until some weeks later and full and definite returns were therefore delayed. The measure procides that the sale, manufacture and importing of alcoholic liquors shll be prohibited from and after January 1, 1917.

SEVEN FULL REELS OF FISKE IN VANITY FAIR

Persons of artistic and literary taste will await with keen interest the coming of the Edison masterpiece "Vanity Fair" in which Mrs. Fiske is starred. This production is booked for screening at the Quirk theater next Wednesday.

Never before has the Edison Co. attempted anything so elaborate or lengthy. The interiors, exteriors, great casts of people and the engagement of Mrs. Fiske herself is ample evidence of the painstaking care and heavy cost represented by this remarkable attraction. Several trips to Boston were made to obtain a replica, in a fashion of its buildings, of Russell Square, London. Antique shops of both New York and Boston were ransacked for hangings and furniture of the period. No expense was spared in matters of casts and "sets," some four hundred odd persons having been employed in the various scenes.

"What we see we believe." The Evening Times press believes you would be satisfied if your stationary bore its imprint.

THREE STRAIGHT DEFEATS FOR HIGH

O'Brien's Work In Bold Contrast to That of Rest of Team Mates.

The Fulton High basketball team suffered the third straight defeat last night at the hands—or, to be frank at the hand of a man named Dunton—of the Morrisville Aggie quintet. The game was played on the City Hall court before a large crowd and the final score was 42-29.

Dunton made 16 baskets from the field and shot four fouls, or a total of 36 points. Helfer, Fritz and White each scored one basket, accounting for the rest of the points rolled up by the visitors.

While Dunton deserves to be classed as the star of the game, he is not deserving of as much credit for his work as O'Brien of the locals, who, unaided by his teammates made six baskets from the field for a total of 12 points and four fouls, thus cornering more than one-holf of the points made by the Fulton team. Martin, also played a good game, making five baskets from the field. Wallace was the only scorer on the Fulton team aside from these two men and he made one basket.

While the Aggies' score was made practically by one man the rest of the team should not be discredited, as their splendid passing and all-round knowledge of the game was responsible for Dunton's success.

But after all, O'Brien outshone Dunton, the Fulton boy's dribbling and shooting being of a more spectacular nature.

Caging Was Easy

As in previous games, the guarding of the Fulton team was far grom being up to standard. Time and again the Morrisville forwards would carry the ball down the court annd with one Fulton man to evade, the standing guard, they had no difficulty in caging the ball.

During the game when the local boys guarded closely, the visitors were kept from scoring and O'Brien and Martin would "find the basket." But the team work of the locals would again lag and become ragged and Dunton would use his right hand to good advantage. The star of the visitors was not a fast man and he could not be compared to the Oswego Normals' center in ll-around playing, but he was quick to take advantage of every situation, particularly under his own basket when with the one free arm and the other guarded, he would work the ball into the basket.

Martin of the Fulton High team was the first man to score, making a long shot from the center of the court. He followed this up with another. A foul was called on thel ocals for two men on, which Dunton made good, scoring the first point for his team. Dunton made two baskets in quick succession and a foul by Christie which O'Brien made good, brought the score to five all. Helfer, the only man on the visitors' team to score in the first half, with the exception of Dunton, caged the ball at this time from the middle of the floor. Dunton standing under the basket unguarded placed an easy one in. He failed to make good a try at foul which was made by Wallace but soon after made good a foul by Frawley, called for pushing. Dunton made four baskets in a row before Martin shot a basket from the side of the court. Another basket by Dunton was followed by a foul which O'Brien made good.

O'Brien followed this point with three baskets in a row, all made after a dribble. Wallace was the next man to score. The first half closed with another basket by Dunton from the field, a foul which O'Brien shot and another foul which Dunton made good.

Dunton Everywhere

Dunton started play in the second half immediately and scored the first two baskets. Martin followed him, then Dunton caged another. The game long before this had begun to be "Dunton" all over. O'Brien scored, then White, after which O'Brien shot another foul. It was time for Dunton again and he dropped one in and followed this up with a foul. O'Brien then made two baskets, Dunton followed with two more. O'Brien shot another and Fritz after some briliant passing between his whole team caged the ball. Martin scored from the field and with a basket by Dunton, the game was brought to a close.

The lineup of the teams was as follows:

Morrisville Aggies (42)		Fulton (29)
White	Right Forward	Martin
George	Center	Wallace
Helfer	Right Guard	Webb

Baskets—Dunton, 16; Helfer, 1; White, 1; Fritz, 1; Wallace, 1; Martin, 5; O'Brien, 6. Fouls—Duntonl 4; O'Brien, 4; Webb, 1.

Referee: Morin. Scorekeeper: Lynch. Timer; Freedman.

Three preliminaries are also set down for the evening, the lineup to be as follows:

Young Alnutt vs. Kid Bovie, Mike Murray vs. Al Williams, Mike Bray vs. ——.

SCRATCH GAME IN PLACE OF REGULAR ONE

Them atch scheduled for last night at the Onyx alleys between the Nondescripts and West Side teams of the City League was called off owing to the absence of some members of both teams.

The spectators who had met to witness the match were treated to an interesting fray, when Rear and Chubb selected two four-men teams and bowled a series of three games, one of them resulting in a tie.

Rear in the first game rolled 247 pins. The results of the three matches was as follows:

Pringle	153	172	170

BUTTER PRROBLEM IS INTERESTING THE WOMEN

Berlin—No subject is engaging more attention in Germany than the butter problem. The Frankfurter Zeitung publishes a passionate appeal to the women of Germany, teling them to rejoice in the fact that although they are locked in a fortress they are not suffering from hunger. The writer says:

"Anybody who listens to the conversations of German women, no matter to what class they belong, is constantly faced with the subject of butter, as if the women had no other care, no other yearning, except for butter. The ytalk, not of war or of peace, but of butter.

"For sixteen months they have been deprived, perhaps of husband, or son, or brother. They bear it with quiet seriousness and freerecognition that it is necessary. But when they are told that they are to be deprived of butter on their bread, they can talk on the subject for hours and write the most idiotic letters to the men in the field."

100,000 MEN HAVE GONE TO JOIN COLORS

New York—One rundred thousand men have left this country to join the colors of belligerents. This was disclosed by statistics of the Internal Revenue Bureau, following a difference with steamship companies regarding payment of war tax on reservists.

A steerage passenger is assessed at $3 under the war tax. Thec ompanies contended that as the reservists' fares were paid by their governments, the shipping companies should not be assessed. An assessment of one dollar was agreed upon.

"VANITY FAIR" IS NO ORDINARY PRODUCTION

That colossal film masterpiece, "Vanity Fair," with Mrs. Fiske in the role of Becky Sharp, comes to the Quirk theatre next Wednesday. This is an Edison production and easily the greatest ever executed by that well known maker of good pictures. Also, it is conspicuous as the first Edison offering on the newly organized Kleine-Edison Feature Service program.

Needless to say a production of sufficient size to warrant the engagement of Mrs. Fiske is no ordinary film venture. More than four hundred people were employed in many of the big scenes, notably the one which portrays Lady Richardson's ball in Brussels. This scene is in itself elaborate enough to stam "Vanity Fair" an extraordinary production. The antique curio shops of Manhattan were ransacked for hangings and furniture of the period and the entire mammoth floor of the Edison studio was utilized.

In filming the great classic, the Edison producer made an effort to follow the devious plot of Thackeray's novel. The bare outline with the principal characters of thed rama are enough to charge seven reels of film with snap and action. It is one of the genuine film masterpieces of the last two years and will undoubtedly prove immensely popular.

Lack of Organization Chief Agricultural Trouble.

PROFITS ARE AFFECTED.

Former Ambassador Declares Farmers Are Unorganized Industrially, Commercially and Financially and as a Result There Are Wastes—Agriculture Isn't on Decline, He Says.

Philadelphia.—Lack of organization is the chief trouble with American agriculture, Myron T. Herrick, formerly United States ambassador to France, recently said in an address before the agricultural conference. Mr. Herrick's topic was agriculture and the laws required for rural credits.

Mr. Herrick held that the farmers are unorganized industrially, commercially and financially and that, as a result, there are wastes and losses that seriously affect the producer's profits.

Mr. Herrick made it clear, however, that agriculture in this country was not on the decline. Man for man, he said, the American farmer is superior to any other, and in some branches he has brought agriculture to its highest stages of development. The shortcomings of American agriculture are traceable to the fact that the farmers have not combined their resources with the view of helping one another, he said. Their greatest need, he declared, is co-operation, and this can be brought about only through a more intelligent and extended use of the association. He suggested that these legislative steps be considered to relieve conditions:

First.—An amendment of the national banking act to permit any national bank that confines its credit facilities to members to be organized as an association without capital stock.

Second.—An amendment of the banking act of each state to permit any kind of bank that confines its credit facilities to members to be organized as an organization without capital stock.

Third.—A law by the nation and in each state to legalize for associations whatever is lawful for corporations—i. e., a regulatory law.

Fourth.—A clause in such law to permit combinations among farmers' associations or small producers' or consumers' associations.

"Such, in substance, are the basic principles of the laws in all countries where rural co-operation flourishes," said Mr. Herrick. "America is too set in the idea that the corporation or partnership is the only means for organizing business or finance and that the association is intended merely for benevolence, thrift and non-profit objects. There is also a widely prevalent idea that co-operation is of a similar altruistic nature. We should disabuse our minds of these false ideas and put the association and co-operation on a practical, economic basis.

"A system of co-operative associations based on co-operative banks is, in my opinion, the best solution of the troubles that beset American agriculture. The combined wealth and earning power of the farmers are so stupendous that they would become self sufficient if they would consolidate and mobilize their resources through such systems extending from the plains to tidewater. Experience proves that the organized farmer is able to take care of himself. The only way to organization lies through co-operation."

Not a Bad Way.

"I wonder how Ananias and Sapphira got along as a married couple. They were both liars."

"Probably they just accepted each other's little yarns and let it go at that."—Exchange.

HURLS ALIMONY ON PORCH.

Akron (O.) Man Gets Lessons In Proper Way to Pay.

Akron, O.—Probation Officer Switzer recently gave Harry P. Hood instructions as to the proper way to pay $5 a week alimony he was ordered to give his wife.

Hood tied up $4.50 in a small package and threw it upon the porch of his wife's home. Mrs. Hood asked Switzer to make Hood give up the additional 50 cents and added that it would be more satisfactory if in future the money was paid through the court.

TOWNS MORE HEALTHFUL.

Dr. T. D. Wood Ascribes the Cause to Inferior Rural Schools.

In a recent address before the Illinois state charities conference at Danville Dr. Thomas D. Wood, chairman of the committee on health problems in education of the National Education association, declared that there is more ill health among children and adults in rural America today than in our cities. Among other things, he said:

It is apparent that within the past decade the actual and vaunted physical superiority of country people and children over those living in the city has been reversed, and now it is confidently affirmed that for the entire population city dwellers are more healthy than those who dwell in rural districts. City life is more healthful than that of the country.

It is just as true, however, and startlingly significant, in view of the preceding statements, that most of our best human material for the cities and for the nation must still come from the country. If rural America is still to be a satisfactory nursery for human life it must be made healthful and attractive. It must furnish a generous fraction of the best of the population, and it must provide conditions favorable for the cultivation of the best, at least so far as the biologic and fundamental qualities of life are concerned.

The problem, then, for bringing about sufficient improvement in the healthfulness of rural life to provide a worthy birthplace and nursery for the best human stock is not simply a problem of the rural school, of the farm or of rural life in general, but it is a great, pressing problem of the nation affecting national safety, national prosperity and national perpetuity.

Rural schools are, on the average less adequate for their use than prisons, asylums, almshouses, stables, dairy barns, pigpens, chicken houses and dog kennels are for their uses. Healthful and attractive rural schools are absolutely essential to the physical, mental social, economic and moral well being of the children themselves and to the life and welfare of the nation as a whole. The health care of rural school children should include at least the following:

Schoolhouses sanitary and attractive well ventilated, lighted, cleaned and equipped within and without with the health essentials.

Teachers better trained and better paid to do their logical and full share in carrying out a health program.

Health examinations, including dental inspection, once a year.

Follow-up health work by district and school nurses.

Health care in the school, including health instructions, warm school lunches, toothbrush drills and inculcation of all health habits.

Provision for removal of injurious physical defects by dental clinics, health clinics, etc.

Co-operation of all available individuals and organizations for the promotion of health and welfare of country school children.

MINOR MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BY CONGRESS

Several Treaties to Be Ratified—Suffrage and Prohibition Hosts on Hand.

While the preparedness measures and means of raising additional revenue will occupy a greater part of the time of congress, other measures less important will also be considered. The Colombian treaty, which carries $25,000,000 and an apology for the land taken by the United States for the Panama canal zone and for the action of President Roosevelt, may be disposed of by the senate. Senator Stone, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, is in favor of ratifying it, but it is feared now by friends of the treaty that there will be enough opposition to defeat it. Senator Borah, a Republican member of the foreign relations committee, has repeatedly said that he would use all his power to prevent ratification.

The Nicaraguan treaty, which provides $3,000,000 for a canal right of way, will be stoutly opposed by Senator Smith of Michigan and others and may never be ratified.

A new treaty with Haiti providing for supervision of that country by the United States will be presented.

The attitude of this country toward Mexico will be discussed in the senate. But if President Carranza succeeds in crushing Villa and bringing about peace congress will not devote much time to that country.

The bill to provide a more liberal government for the Philippines may be passed at this session. The house passed the Jones bill last winter, but it did not get out of the senate committee.

The two spectacular issues before congress will be that of woman suffrage and prohibition. Large numbers of woman suffrage and prohibition advocates are coming here from the various states to make determined efforts to get votes for women and to make the capital dry. It is estimated that 300 or 400 women will frequent the corridors of the capitol for months to urge congressmen to support the proposed amendment to the constitution. The prohibitionists are quite as determined that their proposition to drive liquor out of Washington shall be accepted.

Logical.

"How bright May looks since her engagement!" "Yes; a match usually lights up a girl's face!"

The Beginning of a Love Story

By F. A. MITCHEL

Is that a white cloud far up against the blue sky? If so, what means that dotted line? The dots—indeed, the whole line—moves. It is ascending.

No, it is not a cloud; it is the summit of a mountain. Those dots are climbers tied together by a rope. They seem near the top, but that is because they are so far from me. It will be several hours before they reach it.

I came to Chamonix to make the ascent of Mont Blanc. But yesterday I was slightly indisposed, and, if I remember correctly, those in the house in which I am lodged sent for the doctor, who came and said I had a fever. My window looks out on the mountain, and I long to regain my strength that I may fulfill the purpose of my coming.

My landlady partly opens my door and peeps through the crack. What means that startled expression on her face? She withdraws hurriedly, and I hear her calling, "Come, quick!"

I am lying in the snow near the summit of the mountain. Beneath me is the valley, beyond which is a succession of mountain peaks. How still is everything! From year to year, from century to century, these mountains revolve with the motion of the earth, a succession of night and day, never interrupted. It is always winter up here; at least there is always snow. I wonder if summer will ever come. Let the earth once be joggled and the inclination of its axis changed—then it may be torrid on these slopes and reptile monsters take the place of the chamois.

A face comes between me and the scene spread out before me. The latter is cold, the former warm; the one merciless, the other full of sympathy. A woman's eyes are looking into mine anxiously.

Singular that I should be lying in the cold snow with this girl looking at me. I shiver, and the anxiety on her face deepens. She takes my hand, but little warmth is imparted. She lays hers on my brow, but I gain no comfort.

I am about to speak to her to ask what this all means when she fades away as figures disappear in moving pictures. Then persons move about me, each one doing something, but the whole to me is an endless confusion. But presently the snow under me ceases to be cold, and now there is a slight warmth in my back. The face of the girl again appears before me, like an enlarged face on a screen, shutting out all else. Something of its previous anxiety is missing. Again it disappears, this time suddenly.

Then the sun shone down on me hot as molten lava. I was experienced in the heat of the sun at great heights, shining through a thin atmosphere, but I had never known anything like this. It seemed as if it were burning out my vitals. Meanwhile the scene about me was changing. I was cold, then hot, but I was not on the mountain. I was nowhere. I simply felt the heat and the cold and did not know which to dread the more.

Now and again that sweet girlish face flitted before me. Sometimes I could see her figure fading, not near by, but at a distance. Others came and went, but I took no notice of them. They were like shadows to me. But she—she was individual and always the same. Her hair and eyes were brown, her face oval, her complexion fair, with a touch of red in her cheeks.

Again I was lying in bed beside my window. There were the mountain and the dotted line where it was before, but now instead of moving upward it was descending. I felt an inexpressible relief from suffering and realized that I had been very ill and was in a state of convalescence. My landlady was standing at a table pouring a liquid from a vial into a glass. She turned and, seeing me looking at her, put down the vial and the glass and came to me.

"What has been the matter?" I asked her.

An expression of relief came over her features as she told me I had been very ill—indeed, was still very ill. I must be quiet and not excite myself.

I soon fell into a slumber, all the while conscious of a restfulness that was delightful. How long I slept I know not, but as soon as I awoke my landlady brought me a bowl of broth. I undertook to feed myself, but was too weak. She gave me a few spoonfuls of the broth, which was all I cared for at the time.

As I grew better I felt a desire to know whether the girl who had appeared to me during what I now realized was delirium was a creature of fancy or flesh and blood. I described her to my landlady, and she said: "She must be the American girl in the next house. The tourists have all been interested in your case, and this young lady came in to see you. She has been of great service."

"Please tell her," I replied, "that I am convalescent and ask her to come to see me, that I may thank her for her attention."

When the girl came I recognized her at once as the object of my dream or whatever it was. She looked at me with a hopeful expression.

"You have been in to see me before," I said. "I am under an obligation to you."

"Not at all," she replied. "But I am surprised that you have been conscious of my presence. You were delirious."

"You took my hand."

She blushed slightly. "I supposed you were not aware of it."

It marked the beginning of a love story, but of the story I shall maintain silence.

Christmas Among The Wealthy Kiddies

CHRISTMAS in Millionaire row: Is it a day spent in fairyland, where one has but to wish and all sorts of lovely things come tumbling down from somewhere?

Does Santa Claus come decked in gold and diamonds when he dashes over the roof tops as the little children of the rich lie softly cradled in their beds? Not a bit of it. Santa is the same jolly old saint when he drops down the chimneys of Fifth avenue, New York, as when he leaves a toy on the ash strewn hearths of the east side. He knows that, although the big nurseries and playrooms of the avenue already hold stacks of toys and beautiful things, somehow when the flavor of fir and holly is in the air there is the same thrill in the hearts of the tots in fur and velvet as in those in cotton. And blessed old Santa smiles on both!

To all youngsters, rich or poor—yes, and old or young—he is the embodiment of the blessed Yuletide spirit which brightens the entire year.

WINTER COMFORT.

This Luxury For the Juvenile Is One of the New Combinations.

A BRISK WALKER.

Gray astrakhan and sealskin have been effectively combined to give this beautiful effect. The coat has a demi-belt of seal and, with a chubby muff, is worn over a voile gown of Belgian blue, banded with velvet ribbon in varying widths.

Books as Carriers of Disease.

The report of the commissioner of education undertakes to reassure persons who are fearful of the spread of disease through books by recording the results of recent investigation at Yale university. During the cleaning of the library a chemical analysis of the dust was made. About half of this was found to be mineral matter, while the other half was organic, including paper fiber, wood fiber and molds. No mouth bacteria were found, and in general the analysis showed the harmlessness of the dust.

The Ordeal

The pie is on the pantry shelf, where it was laid last night;
It bears no dents where certain teeth have nipped a furtive bite.
The cat sleeps on the sofa with a calm, untroubled brow;
She has no fear that any one will dock her whiskers now.
And in the kitchen there are heaps and heaps of kindling wood;
It's getting on toward Christmas time and Tommy's being good.

At half past eight he shuts his book and yawns and shakes his head
And says: "Good night to every one. It's time to go to bed."
And just about the time that dad is starting out for town
You hear him trotting down the stairs to shake the furnace down.
And yesterday his teacher said: "Your boy has changed somehow.
He's taking such an interest in the work he's doing now."

He folds his napkin every day. His clothes are clean and neat.
He never kicks the cans along when he goes down the street.
He still is running with his gang, but up to Friday night
For almost fifteen days on end he hadn't had a fight.
Still, we'll be glad when Christmas comes, for it is all too plain
That Tommy boy is staggering beneath a fearful strain.

—James J. Montague in New York American.

THE BOYS' CHRISTMAS.

Several "Things" That Please the Small Men of the Family.

Leaving out any question of the beneficial effect upon boys of certain Christmas gifts, there is a long list, any one of which will give pleasure pure and simple, without any moral reflections. A good flag of United States standard make, with pole and fitting for a window casing, delights a boy and adds to his patriotism.

Of course a "wheel" is a most acceptable gift, or if he has one some additions to his outfit, a lantern, bell, cyclometer or rack, or a sweater, which, if he does not own, he wants.

In the same connection a football, "regulation" bat and ball, tennis racket, set of dumbbells, all suggest themselves to suit the tastes for different out of door sports.

A bag of marbles, the bag made of duck or coarse linen and his initial embroidered on it, will find a welcome, particularly if it holds "reals."

Most of the fathers of the boys of today never dreamed of having a watch until they were of age, many of them not until they earned one, but pretty watches that are also good timepieces are so cheap and plentiful nowadays that boys of eight and nine aspire to them. Any boy who has a wornout watch or none at all will be pleased with one at Christmas. A good chain, strong if not expensive, should go with it. Studs, sleeve buttons and scarfpins please boys, and an addition to their stock of neckwear is never objectionable.

Guns and rifles—the mere mention of them makes a boy's eyes snap. Only the coolest and most sensible, however, should be trusted with them. It is almost better, indeed, when thinking of buying one for any lad under twenty, to follow Punch's matrimonial advice, "Don't." But how a boy loves them! He will fondle a gun as a girl does her doll, patting it gently and passing his hands over stock, trigger and muzzle, while his eyes shine with longing or, if he owns it, with actual affection.

Don'ts For Parents.

Here are some very important don'ts for parents: Don't forget that children, like plants, suffer seriously from want of sunlight. Don't forget that children are more seriously affected by impure air than grown people. Don't forget that little children are easily depressed by gloomy surroundings, and this lowers their vitality. Don't forget that lowered vitality makes children more liable to catch any infectious disease.

Don't think that any room in the house will do for the nursery. The sunniest, most airy and most cheerful room in the house should be given to the children if you want them to be healthy. Don't shake or scold a child who wakes up and cries out in the night. Often night terrors are a purely nervous affection, and any harshness only makes matters worse. Don't say "don't" to your little ones. Remember to tell the child what he is to do, not what he is not to do.

It often happens that little children especially those nervous or highly strung, are disposed to keep on crying when they get started. When you wish a child to stop sobbing get him to take a good drink of cold water. It almost always will stop the sobbing immediately.

GIRLS GET BIRD CATCHER.

Wellesley Students Now to Dissect Sparrows Instead of Cats.

Boston.—Wellesley college, the home of beauty and culture, now has an official sparrow chaser. He is John H. Oakes, and he receives $40 a month for catching birds for dissection.

Cats were used formerly at Wellesley for dissecting, but this was discontinued when one of the college janitors was haled into court on the charge of stealing a prize cat. President Ellen Fitz Pendleton was threatened with a summons by Chief of Police Hiram Brown, and cats thereafter were shunned.

Oakes has a number of traps which he places in the fields around Wellesley.

Rare Cactus Blossoms.

Chicago.—A night blooming cactus in the yard of M. G. Peterson at 1419 Emerson street, Evanston, which blooms once every six years, started to flower, was in full bloom in a few hours and then closed for another six years. The family almost missed seeing the plant in full bloom. They were at an amusement park and didn't get home until the blossom started to close. The flower is about ten inches in diameter.

Distant Popularity.

"Does absence really make the heart grow fonder?"

"It does in some cases. There are persons who when they are a thousand or so miles away I can almost tolerate."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

BE TACTFUL.

Talent is something, but tact is everything. Talent is serious, sober, grave and respectable. Tact is all that and more too. It is not a seventh sense, but is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell and the lively touch. It is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties and the remover of all obstacles. Tact is a wonder worker.

Pretty Taffeta Evening Dress For the Demure Miss

Designed by Franklin Simon & Co., New York.

THIS dress of French taffeta is very interesting because of its puffed overskirt. The skirt consists of bustle effect drapings at the hips and pays no attention to the mode for slimness. Metallic braid edges the bottom of the tunic, which is caught up short in front and falls in deep points toward the back over a lace petticoat. Soft folds of metallic meshed lace fashion the upper part of the bodice and sleeves, while the lower part of the bodice is of taffeta. Satin slippers to match are worn. ANNA MAY.

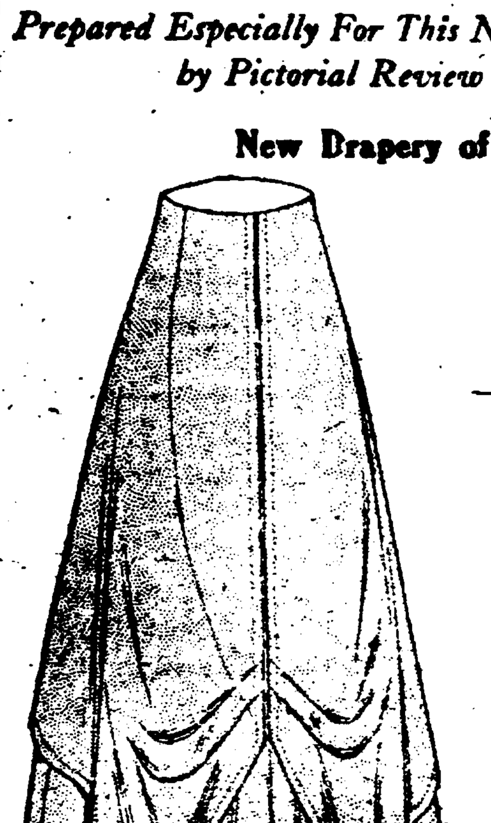
New Drapery of Pleasing Effect.



A new model for a draped skirt with high waist-line. Chiffon broadcloth combined with crepe Georgette is an effective combination for the skirt.

As charming as are the newest blouses for dressy wear, the skirts are equally so. Delectably suited to development in soft materials is this skirt of chiffon broadcloth with a draped tunic. There is a two-piece foundation of broadcloth, while the tunic is of crepe Georgette.

In medium size the skirt requires 4½ yards 44-inch material. The skirt may be regulated to suit personal fancy, but fashion dictates ankle length as the most correct for draped effects.

The placing of the various sections upon the material is a simple matter if the cutting guide is followed carefully. After the broadcloth is folded in half, the tunic is laid into position first, resting directly on the lengthwise fold. Next comes the piecing for tunic on a lengthwise thread. Front and back gores come next, both on lengthwise fold. There is room for the piecing along selvage edge opposite back gore.

If the open front is preferred for the tunic, cut off front edge on double "oo" perforations.

With the open front it is a graceful idea to connect the two sections of the tunic with a buckle of gold or silver.

What Makes a Home?

When we say "homemaker" we usually have in mind the woman who keeps and manages the house. But, truly, is it fair to put the entire burden of homemaking on the shoulders of woman alone? Home is, in the last analysis, an attitude of mind, a feeling, an emotion of several persons toward one another, and not simply a pride in material possessions.

No matter how strongly a woman synthetized in herself all the instincts and feeling which go to make a home, she cannot alone create the true home unless she is supported by the other members of the family. Father is a homemaker, too, as truly as mother in the higher sense, and each other member must feel his share and responsibility in making the home spirit.

We do not mean, of course, that father must wash the dishes or hire and fire the help, but that he should feel his importance in family councils and the need for his judgment above and beyond the mere paying of the bills. The old Spartan type of father, whose very glance made the children tremble and who thought himself the divinely appointed agent over his children's very lives, has happily disappeared. But the modern parent, who has taken his place, seems to have gone to the other extreme of good natured indifference. This is just as unwholesome and unbalanced. Father's opinion, his taste, his co-operation, his strength, are needed equally to support his side of the arch of home.

When the woman is held solely responsible as the homemaker, the children, instead of doing their share, stand around and expect to receive the pleasures and benefits of a fine home spirit without creating this spirit themselves. It is not possible for the woman to carry this load which should be distributed among all the members of the family. The children must be encouraged, each in his own small way, to do some work and take some share in the duties or they will never fully appreciate the pleasures they receive. A definite daily task, like emptying a wastebasket or taking care of pets, putting up a little shelf or helping to [illegible], will [illegible] in the child's mind its close relationship to the home. Only by personal service and doing, either with the hand or heart, do we come to love our surroundings or the people who dwell in them. Only by having a real part in the life of the home can each member feel that it is his home. Too often we feel that the attitude of the father, say, is that it is the mother's home, where she entertains her women friends at afternoon gatherings, where she has chosen the furniture, where everything is arranged and ordered as a setting for herself.

Again, too often the young son feels that his mother's parlor is no place for him. Why should it be when its gilt chairs and gilt clocks and fragile draperies are far removed from his masculinity? Home to him probably is the den which he has helped to arrange and decorate with pennants and footballs or where he keeps his books and tools. The one great need in modern home life seems to be to draw the members of a family to the home through greater individual responsibility toward the home.

A VANITY BAG.

One of the Frivolities That Every Woman Is Glad to Carry.

Flesh colored faille classique is used to fashion this dainty bag, which is edged along the seams with a narrow gold lace, while a gold cord and tassel finish both ends. The attractive feature of this prettiness, which would make such a charming Christmas remembrance, is the novel way a gold buckle has been used to give the only elaborate touch. So hunt up your old buckles, have them regilded.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

There is no more stunning combination this season than taffeta and velvet, a fact which this costume amply illustrates. The full circular skirt of taffeta is stitched with [illegible] bands of velvet while the jacket of velvet has satin [illegible] and collar of white [illegible]. Narrow bands of braid trim the belt. In medium size the costume requires 4 yards 36-inch taffeta and 3¾ yards 36-inch velvet, with 3-4 yard cloth for the vest and collar.

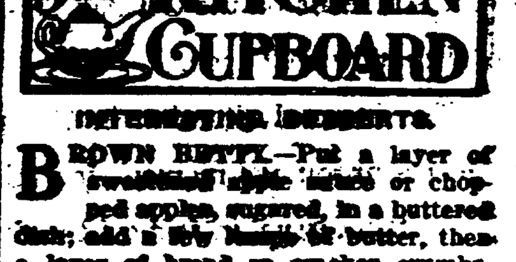
The KITCHEN CUPBOARD



INTERESTING DESSERTS.

BROWN BETTY.—Put a layer of sweetened apple sauce or chopped apples, sugared, in a buttered dish; add a few lumps of butter, then a layer of bread or cracker crumbs, sprinkled with a little cinnamon, then a layer of sauce, etc., making the last layer of crumbs; bake in oven and eat hot with cold cream.

Tapioca Cream.—In a double boiler cook a pint of milk and a heaping tablespoonful of granulated tapioca until the latter is clear. Add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and the yolk of an egg well beaten. Cook till it coats the spoon. Remove from the fire, add a teaspoonful of vanilla and half as much lemon and the stiffly beaten white of the egg. Beat it into the custard, pour into glasses for serving and set aside to become cold.

English Drop Cakes.—Cream a cupful butter, then add successively a cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful soda dissolved in one-half cupful of sour cream, one-half cupful raisins (seeded and chopped), one-half cupful of almonds (chopped finely), one-half teaspoonful vanilla and two and one-half cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls one inch apart on a buttered sheet in a moderate oven.

Mock Cherry Pie.—Two cupfuls chopped cranberries, a cupful chopped raisins, two cupfuls sugar, a tablespoonful flour, one-half cupful cold water, two teaspoonfuls vanilla. Mix well and bake between two crusts.

This pie was such a favorite with one family last year that the home cook prepared large quantities of this filling, cooked it and sealed it in a stone jar. This will save time and labor as well as the trouble and expense of buying cranberries in small quantities. Best of all, mock cherry pie can be had on short notice.

Apple Junket.—Make the junket as usual. Peel and core three apples, stew them with a little water until they are smooth and without lumps, sweeten to taste and add a little lemon juice and grated rind. Beat up the whites of two eggs until they are stiff; then gradually beat in two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar. When the apple puree is cold mix the two together and beat until thoroughly blended. When the junket is quite firm spread the apple meringue over it and garnish with a few preserved cherries.

Dillon Advises Use of Force Against the Greeks; Help Serbia

London—The Daily Telegraph, in its leader this morning, conceding that the Central Powers have won substantial successes in the Balkans, calls upon France and England either to withdraw from Salonica or allow the operations there to be directed by military experts without hindrance by suggestions from politicians.

Declaring that the peril of the allied armies in the Near East justifies the employment of force to make Greece climb off the fence, it calls upon the allie dgovernments to cease lamenting The Hague ideals and adopt any measures necessary to win the war against "an enemy who has trampled upon all international obligations and violated every rule of civilized warfare."

The Times' Athens correspondent telegraphs an interview with Mr. Venizelos, in which the Greek statesman repeats his contention that Greece is bound to support Serbia, and that as a result of the policy of King Constantine in suppressing constitutional government Greece has lost her golden opportunity to realize the Hellenic ambitions and is in danger of being crushed by Greater Bulgaria. He accuses the King of depriving the Venizelist Deputies and electors of their rights to vote in thec oming election. While deprecating the talk of supplanting them onarchy by a republic, he charges the King with perfidious treatment of Serbia and intimates that when the war is over there willbe a day of reckoning.

The King, to whom the interview was submitted, with the consent of Mr. Venizelos, denied the charges but agreed it should be published so the world might judge both sides.

"nI the policy of hesitation and doubt which governs the movements of the Allies in the Balkans there is very grave danger to the forces there. If it be decided to withdraw it is more than probable a million fighting men of Roumania and Greece will joint the enemy."

The Morning Post's Athens corresponding telegraphs that the Bulgarian attacks on thew hole Anglo-French front from Ormanli and Kosturino to Gradic continue to be fierce and persistent, but that the yare being steadily repelled. During the intervals in the fighting he says theg radual withdrawal of the Allies from their advanced positions continues. The military stores are being removed from Ghevgeli and Doiran to Salonica and the civil population and Serbian officials of Ghevgeli, Doiran and the surrounding district have been moving into Greece since Sunday, especially into Salonica, where the Greek authorities are making desperate efforts to house them.

SENATOR LODGE CALLS FOR AN INVESTIGATION

Wilson addressed to Germany in the Lusitania issue quickly will be transformed from the administration's principal source of political strength to a decidedly injurious factor in the political situation.

In the face of the problem, the administration has begun a determinated drive against Germany, its advance being forced through the weaker Austrian front, while at the same time a show of aggressiveness is made on the German front through the recall of Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen.

The internal situation in Germany is considered to make the present a propitious moment for this effort to force o settlement of the Lusitania issue, in fact, o f the entire submarine issue. The hitch which has prevented a settlement heretofore has been chiefly the attitude of the Von Tirpitz faction in Germany. Though apparently sidetracked, Admiral von Tirpitz and his followers have continued a political force, which the imperial German government dared not defy.

The terms of settlement of the Lusitania issue must include disavowal, indemnity and official guarantees from the German government that American rights on the high seas henceforth will be recognized. Of these three the most difficult to obtain is the disavowal. It scarcely is hoped to obtain an out annd out disavowal of the attack, but in lieu of that there would have to be an apology made which would satisfy the peopleo f the United States, and which would give to the administration a clean record for having obtained reperation of ad ecidedly substantial character.

Now in proportion as this apology or disavowal approaches the terms demanded in the United States itm ust sacrifice the German goverment, and particularly Admiral von Tirpitz and his friends, before the German people, There's the ruz.

But at the present moment reports from Germany indicate the growth of thep ro-peace party at an enormous rate. This peace sentiment serves as a check upon Admiral von Tirpitz and the militarists. By striking them oment that this peace cry is at the crest of the wave, and by giving force to this blow through precipitating a breach of friendly relations with Austria, or at least of stopping short of that only in the event that Austria completely and promptly yields, the administration hopes to make its drive against Germany for a settlement of thes ubmarine issue a glorious success.

There is hardly a chance that friendly relations with Austria will survive this stratagem: No one here doubts Austria has been forced into the role of dupef or Germany in the Mediterranean submarine and that these submarines boasting the Austrian flag are really German men-of-war. If that is Austria's position it will be hard for her to settle successfully this issue with the United States without a break in friendly relations. It almost might be said at this time that the cards are stacked for ab reak with Austria.

It is well realized here that the administration at this late date never can stop in the middle of this advance and allow the recent note sent to Austria to remain unsupported by action and thus fall in the group of ineffective notes sent to Germany.

LONDON BELIEVES ALLIES HAVE ABANDONED SERBIA

London—No definite information has reached London that would locate the new Anglo-French line in the Balkans. Military observers here are not even certain whether the allied force is on Serbian soil or has retired altogether into Greece. The latest advices, however, indicate that the line yesterday wasf ormed just inside the Greek frontier. This view is confirmed by German official advices which say all the Allies have been driven from Serbia.

The official messages from thef ront to London ad Paris make it clear that a general retirement has been in progress for four days—a retirement necessitated not only by superior forces on the front but by severe pressure on both flanks and the presence of Bulgarian irregulars in the rear thath ave ben threatening the railroad connecting the army with its base at Salonica. Apparently the vigor of the battle which has accompanied the retreat declined on Thursday, for the movement of the French and rBitish was less restricted yesterday. Only minor rear guard actions were fought and little loss occurred on either side. Artillery and machine guns, held well in the rear, inflicted very heavy losses on the Bulgars in the earlier phases of the battle, but the weight of men and metal the Bulgars were able to throw ito the field in attack after attack compelled the gradual evacuation of the Vardar valley positions.

The censensus here is that the Allies now will continue to fall back until they reach Salonica. The pres is demanding that the fort be held as a base for further operations in the Near East.

The question now arises whether the Bulgarians and Germans will followthe Allies across the Grek frontier and what attitude the Greek goxernment wil adopt. King Constantine has promised to use his army top rotect the retiring force if it undertakes to re-embark and has shown his god faith by preventing Bulgarian raiding bands from destroying the Allies' communications, but it is doubtful whether the Allies will agree to evacute Salonica. It is on this point that negotiations between Greece and the Entente Allies now are proceeding, and the feeling here and at Paris and Rome is given briefly in the following paragraph printed in large type by yesterday's Evening Stars: —

"Them oment is approaching when the Greek government must decide. The Allies, now more than ever before, require freedom of movement at Salonica. Hitherto their demands had been met by procrastinathion, and a rfusal now will mean war."

MR. STRAUS ON PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

The appointment of Oscar Straus to the Public Service Commission is the best appointment that Governor Whitman has ever made.

It is, the type even more than the man that is important.

Less experienced in business than his two gifted and famous brothers, Nathan and Isidor Straus, has a passion for public affairs and administrative ability of such high order that a Democratic President entrusted a most difficult foreign mission to him, and a Republican President later chose him for his Cabinet.

As Secretary of Labor under President Roosevelt, Mr. Straus went to Japan and by his tact and force of character amicably settled for the time the Japanese emigration issue.

Governor Whitman will now be said to have made a bid for the Progressive vote. In truth, he had made a bid for the votes of all those—and their name is legion—who would like to see the entire Public Service Commission composed of men of character and capacity.

The Commission has lost public confidence, because a majority of its members have been political parasites, or mere corporation agents, instead of vigilant guardians of thep ublic interests, as they all ought to be.

Oscar Straus will never be the puppet of party, of a "boss," or of a corporation. Whether he will have the patience to master the multitudinous details in the administration of the public utility companies, we do not know.

He will certainly help to put an end to the ways of secrecy, division and silence which have shrouded so many acts of the Public Service Commissio with mystery and scandal.—N. Y. American.

RECRUITING STATIONS IN LONDON SWAMPED

London—The rush of "last-minute men," who desire to scape the stigma of being forced to join the colors if conscription should be adoyted, continued today, the last day but one of the trial period for the Earl of Derby's recruiting plan. Lines formed at the recruiting stations as early as 5 o'clock this morning and remained there all day.

Announcement that there would be no extension of the time limit for the test of the volunteer system apparently convinced many men of military fitness that the Earl of Derby was in earnest and caused them to flock to the stations.

HARTMANN HAS POPE'S MESSAGE TO KAISER

Ronme—Cardinal Felix von Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, left Rome tonight after again seeing Pope Benedict.

The aCrdinal said that he was the bearer of a Papal message for Emperor William, and also recommendations for peace.

It is understood that Cardinal von Hartmann probably will see Prince von Buelow, German Ambassador to Italy, in Switzerland.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

The carrying on of the work of the Chamber of Commerce requires large contributions from the business interests; the programs which we lay out require an expenditure of large amounts of revenue. A city can only exist through the success of its commercial, industrial, civic and agricultural life. If it does not grow, decay will set in. Without the wealth and employment which successful manufactures and commerce and agriculture bring to a community, it cannot develop along the various lines of civic and welfare improvement. One side of the city life is dependent upon the other. At the same time that we are instrumental in establishing a factory in our city, we should interest ourselves in seeing that the conditions under which men and women work in that factory are sanitary and safe. We should see to it that they are housed in a proper manner and should make it impossible for any man to build tenements or buildings which have not the proper amount of light and air for every tenant. We should secure just treatment for workingmen. We should see that their children are furnished not only manual training but vocational training as well, so that the boy or girl obliged to leave school at an early age will be equipped to perform some useful work. The establishing of such schoolls not only makes youth a useful self-supporting member of society, but furnishes our industries with the skilled artisans which they require.

We all must love Fulton, not because its fields are any greener, its air any purer or that its babbling brooks sing their plaintive songs with any sweeter cadence than in any other place, no, we all MUST love Fulton, because it is our HOME, it holds all that is NEAR and DEAR to us. Within its borders we have erected our RESIDENCES, established our BUSINESS and we are rearing a FAMILY with a view to living life at its best and getting the very best there is in life out of it for OURSELVES, our FAMILIES and our FELLOW-MEN.

You are true to your FAMILY; therefore you HAVE to be true to FULTON. Protect Fulton by trading at home; do not believe in the fellow who is helping strangers. As a matter of fact what does the fellow in Fargo, North Dakota, care about the fellow in Fulton? Nothing and that's true of all other fellows. Don't believe that by trading in Syracuse you will get better service, better goods for lower prices. That's a big mistake; you can get just as good things in Fulton for just as low a price as in any other City. Therefore be it resolved that we will do all our Christmas shopping in the City of Fulton and if per chance your merchant has not in stock what you want, tell him first and give him a chance to get it for you.

If you do not realize Mr. Citizen, the greatness of Fulton, just COMPARE what we can offer with the inducements offered by other cities. If YOU are not acquainted with your OWN city, how can you expect the outside world to know us, what we have, what we can offer, or the opportunities awaiting the manufacturers and the homeseekers.

Wake up. Shake yourself good and proper and believe in Fulton—or pack your trunk and move out. We can get others and better ones in your place. Don't think for one moment that you are IT, because as long as you trade in a foreign city or advertise in foreign papers, you can't be IT, don't you know?

We are compiling a list of names of the people trading in other cities and ordering from mail order houses and that will be a very nice publication.

Watch the Chamber of Commerce. Try to get them, but be square in your dealings and come and see us; don't be a coward and talk on the high and byways. Be a man, walk straight up to us and tell us what you think of us and you will be respected. If you don't act that way, you know what you are; no need of mentioning this in the paper just now. Later on.

Irish Regiments Save Tenth British Division in Terrific Fighting

London—"The Gallantry of the Irish Soldier," "Saved by Irish Troops," "Irish, as Ever, First in War," are specimen headlines in the London press this morning over the report from the Balkan theatre which tells how Sir Bryan Mahon's Tenth all-Irish division saved the day in terrific fighting against heavy odds in the retirement from Lake Doiran toward a strong position dominating the valley of the Vardar.

I am told that the Bulgarians, outnumbering the British five to one, came on in German fashion in solid masses and while the main body of the British force was retreating easily and in good order, the Munster Fusiliers, the Dublin Fusiliers and the Connaught Rangers, hidden among the hills, allowed the Bulgars to advance to the middle of a deep defile, when they opened such a terrible fire with machine guns, following with bayonet charges, that the Bulgars, leaving many hundreds of their dead and wounded in the trap, fled in a panic, from which they did not recover until the gallant Irish had rejoined the main British force, which is in close touch with the French, and now is at grips with the Bulgars near the Greek border.

The exploit of the Irish was told by the War Office last night in this report:—

"After enduring violent attacks delivered by the enemy in overwhelming numbers, the Tenth division succeeded with the help of reinforcements, in retiring to a strong position from Lake Doiran westward toward the valley of the Vardar in conjunction with our allies.

"The division is reported to have fought well against very heavy odds, and it was largely due to the gallantry of the troops, especially the Munster Fusiliers, the Dublin Fusiliers and the Connaught Rangers, that the withdrawal was successfully accomplished.

"Owing to them ountainous nature of thec ountry it had been necessary to place eight field guns, for the purpose of defence, in positions from which itw as impossible to withdraw them when the retirement took place.

"Our casualties amounted to 1,500 men."

British Partially Relax Censorship on Public News; Exceptions Made

London—The ban of the British censorship on diplomatic questions and matters relating to dealings of the Foreign Office has been removed provided the publication of news regarding such subjects does not conflict with the Defence of the Realm Act. Newspapers and correspondents will be held responsible for any infractions of that act. Messages concerning naval or military matters, however, must first pass the censor. Such are the decisions of the Foreign Office, made public last night in the following official statement:

"Sir Edward Grey has arranged that from December 20, 1915, censorship by the Press Bureau on behalf of the Foreign Office shall be suspended. This will not mean a change in the provisions of the Defence of the Realm acts or of regulationsm ade thereunder. They will be binding as heretofore, but the responsiblity of seeing that they are complied with as regards thep ublication in any newspaper or by any news agency of matter relating tof oreign affairs will rest upon thed irectors of that newspaper or news agency.

"As regards matter telegraphed abroad from this countrry, the responsibility will rest with the senders of telegrams. The censorship of press telegrams from one foreign country to another over British cables will remain unaltered, since the senders of such telegrams are not within British jurisdiction and cannot be proceeded against under the Defence of the Realm acts.

"Nothing in this announcement affects the existing arrangements for the censorship of naval or military matter, to which wholly different considerations apply, nor the censorship of other matters, save so far as they relate to foreign affairs."

Marksmanship and Observance of Law the Aims of New Club

A number of young men, sportsmen, are interesting themselves in the formation of a gun club, to be known as the Young Men's Gun club of Fulton, The men interested in the movement have selected the Messrs. J. F. and Ray Westover as a committee to work up sentiment and secure signatures.

A meeting, to outline plans for quarters, which will include a shooting gallery and other equipment, will be held soon after the New Year and invitations to attend the meeting will be extended to several prominent speakers, including Speaker Sweet and H. H. Pendergast. Mr. Pendergast is state chairman of the Trappers' club.

The speakers will be asked to talk on matters which will have a tendency to make the club flourish and also advise the members how to maintain an organization of good fellowship.

The object of the new club will be to promote better sportsmanship, to live up to and obey the game laws and to see these laws enforced by others who are not connected with the club, and to urge the State Commission to establish a game farm in this vicinity.

The club rooms may be located in the downtown business section which will afford sufficient room for a shooting gallery. The club rooms, it is expected, will be fitted out with pool table, literature concerning field games, etc. A trap may be purchased for use in the open air to promote better marksmanship.

Speeding Nags May be Seen on Bed of Canal, Say the Horsemen

In the event that permission to use West 1st, south of Broadway, as a speedway is not secured from the city authorities, by local horsemen, it is planned to get leave to race the nags on the straightaway course afforded by the old Oswego canal bed north. This straightway can be flooded with water and made otherwise desirable, except for one feature, and that is the distance spectators would be compelled to travel to witness the feats of the ponies and their drivers, say those who are interested in promoting sport.

But the horsemen have not despaired of securing permission to use West 1st st. If they succeed they will ask that the speedway shall have police protection during racing time, and further, they assert that no speeding will be tolerated at any hours other than those to be designated.

ALLIES REPULSE TURKISH ATTACK

Paris—The Athens correspondent of the Havas Agency, telegraphing on Sunday, says:—"In the Dardanelles the Turks renewed their attack, which the Allies repulsed succesfully, according to Mytilene despatches. Turkish batteries yesterday bombarded, butw ithout hitting them, two allied cruisers anchored near the shore. The cruisers withdrew without replying.

"An Imbros despatch says the Entente Allies are building huts to accommodate their troops.

"Advices from Sofia are to the effect that the Bulgarian government has prohibited busines transactions in conquered territories until new authorities have assumed their functions."

SENATOR LEA'S INVESTIGATION

Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee has petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate charges that the railroads in his State give away annually many thousands of dollars of passes to public officials, all of which tends to "unlawful and corrupt practices."

This is one investigation which we assume the railroads would welcome. New York had its experience in that respect, and at one time, no one thought of traveling anywhere until he or she was able to secure a pass from some public official or those in a position to secure them. Indeed, both public officials and railroads welcomed the coming of the day when passes were no more. Public officers welcomed it because all their waking hours were filled with thought of securing tickets for some pleading, persistent constituent, while the railroads wondered if ever the day would come when they could run a passenger train that would pay for itself.

If Senator Lea can get his investigation under way it would prove of very great benefit to the State, to the railroads and above all to the public officials concerned.—Buffalo Times.

A GOOD APPOINTMENT

Governor Whitman would have found difficulty in making a better appointment than Oscar S. Straus the chairmanship of the down-state public service board in place of Edward E. McCall. He has ben tried in numerous positions of wide public affairs, and his record is the best. He has been democrat, republican, progressive and republican again, and has been prominent in the affairs of each of these parties. President Cleveland appointed him United States minister to Turkey as far back as 1887, and President Cleveland appointed him to the same position in 1897. Again he was a member of President Roosevelt's cabinet as the secretary of the department of commerce and labor, then recently organized. He is a member of the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague.

Governor Hughes in pleading the case of his public service commission bills was criticised on the ground that under a governor who trafficked in political places weak men would be named, only to make a farce and a menace of the public service commissions. Governor Hughes admitted that this might be true, but pointed out that it was the same as in the case of all other appointive boards, the liability increasing with the importance of the office. But the service commissions will never go backward when governors appoint men of the strength of Oscar S. Straus to membership. The distinguished service he has rendered elsewhere gives assurances that he will elevate the commission to which he has been named.—Watertown Times.

MONEY WORTH OF FARM BUREAU

The farm agent of Jefferson county says in his annual report that the work of a farm bureau should not be measured in terms of dollars, for the work is largely that of education through the means of practical field demonstrations that teach better and more profitable farming. He compares the work with that of the county physician, the sealer of weights and measures and other departments. But since the work is largely educational, he could have found a closer comparison with that of the schools.

At any rate, the money value of a school is difficult is found in measuring the money value of a farm bureau. But both have demonstrated their money value often enough.

Although the Jefferson county agent says that the money value of ab ureau should not be measured, the given an estimate of what itp robably did in a single instance.

During the past season the loss from oat smut amounted to many thousands of dollars in Jefferson county. On some farms the loss was 30 per cent. of the crop.

Last winter and through the spring the bureau advised and demonstrated how it is possible to treat oats to eradicate smut. It is estimated that 500 out of the 6,000 farmers in the county followed the advice of the bureau and treated their seed grain. Taking an average of 15 acres of grain to the farm and a yield of 40 bushels of grain to the acre, the yield would aggre 300,000 bushels of clean grain. Assuming that the crop was 10 per cent. better that it would have been without the treated seed, a saving of 30,000 bushels was effected. That is to say, there was a gain of $15,000.

"Any one familiar with the conditions," says the agent, "will admit this is a low estimate, and it should be kept in mind that this illustration refers to one crop only.

Even if the estimate were 100 per cent. too high, the saving is several thousand dollars more than it costs to run the bureau.—Utica Observer.

POSTAL SERVICE IMPAIRED

From every section of the country, but principally from the Northern and Western states, come complaints of impaired rural mail service. In an effort to save a few thousands of dollars to make up part of the deficit brought on by Democratic tariff legislation, the Post Office Department is cutting the service not only in cities but in rural districts. The latest protest comes from Bristol County, Massachusetts, where mass meetings have been held to devise means of averting the destructive orders of the Department. Residents of some towns find that under a recent order they must change their post office addresses, as they will henceforth reside on rural routes extending from cities other than those from which they have received mail for many years. Until all their correspondents learn of the changes, letters will go to the old address and be remailed, with a day's delay, at the least. Farmers who have built up a profitable business in supplying a steady market with eggs and young chicks find that their parcel post service is so materially impaired that they despair of retaining their trade. Some rural carriers have suddenly lost their jobs through no fault of their own and postmasters find their business transferred to offices to which it is not naturally tributary. While this is exasperating, to say nothing of financial loss and disruption of established trade, it is just what might be expected from an administration on whose head boasts that he has never been in business and who appointed a postmaster general who had no practical knowledge of the postal service.

BEGIN AGAIN

A man in distress wants something substantial. He does not want charity—that is, he does not need charity. He may want it. Charity is a crutch, and it teaches him to lean—to walk unnaturally. This man wants real help, and they spell it—w-o-r-k. When he gets work he can help himself, and you cannot reason this out any other way and be practical. Sympathy and charity and help get tangled.

I've had some seasons in life that were pretty "lean," but somehow "sympathy" always got my goat. It made me feel ashamed of myself, and I always figure that all real men feel the same way about sympathy.

When a man wants to sit down and hold a sympathy session with me, and tell me all about his troubles, he finds that he is on my tin-ear side. I refuse to listen. If he comes to me and wants work, I'll find it for him; but you bet your boots, he'll have to work, I do.

I can rejoice in another man's prosperity, and it is always gratifying to me to help the fellow who actually needs help; but I never get all worked up over this sympathy racket.

If you are up against it, just begin again. Start somewhere, if it's only a street car. Begin again. Don't borrow, for this is nothing but polite begging, or plain panhandling. A man who is well and healthy can always find something to do, but the trouble is, a lot of men refuse to begin again. They prefer to beg.

A few men who have worked at a trade all their lives find it difficult to get into a new groove; but if you notice, these men are always willing to do anything, and there is the distinction that I am trying to make. A loafer will be a loafer, in or out of a job.—The Silent Partner.

STATE EMPLOYES MAY GET STANDARDIZED PAY

Albany—Adequate salaries, regular promotions and a pension fund for faithful state employes will form the outstanding features of the report of the Senate's Civil Service Committee, Senator C. T. Horton, chairman, said last night in the statement he issued to explain thep urposes of the committee's investigation. He explained that the committee wished, primarily, to standarize salaries of the state employes, who number about 18,000.

It had been reported that the committee would recommend the reduction of from 800 to 1,200 in the number of employes. This, Senator Horton said, was far from true. He said that where positions were found useless or the incumbents rendering little or no service to the state the committee would ask the abolition of such jobs.

Experts employed by the committee have studied the work of every employe, Senator Horton said, and that "such protection as is consistent with sound administration" will be furnished overpaid employes who have been faithful in their work.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—At considerable expense to the Government for printing, large cards are printed just before Congress convenes, containing the names of the Senators and Members who make up the approaching Congress. These cards are distributed throughout the Capitol and the departments. On November 2nd there were held a number of special elections to fill vacancies in the House body. Four Republicans and one Democrat were elected. On November 1st this card directory was issued, and it contains the names of none of the new Members. By postponing the publication of this card directory for three or four days a correct list could have been issued. As it is, the card will have to be corrected and struck off again. It is a small matter, but it serves to indicate the slipshod and unbusinesslike manner in which the affairs at the Capitol are carried on by the Democrats now in power.

When the currency bill got to the Senate at least a dozen revises were struck off before a correct bill was placed in the hands of the Senators. Not only did this result in large expense for printing, but it delayed legislation on the currency question. When it is remembered that the cost to this country for each day Congress is in session averages between $25,000 and $40,000, the effect of such delays due to blunders and inaccuracies in printing can be appreciated.

At the time the Underwood tariff bill was up for the consideration of the House, a handbook on the tariff was struck off under the supervision of Daniel C. Roper, then clerk of the Ways and Means Committee, now first assistant postmaster general. To aid him in the compilation of this work Mr. Roper had a number of young women from the census office. This handbook was a publication of over 800 pages, largely made up of tabulated matter, the most expensive sort of material for a printing office to handle. Five revisions were made of this handbook before one satisfactory to the House was finally published. Each edition was subjected to criticism, even by the Democrats themselves, on account of the inaccuracies of statement and figures. Thousands of each edition were struck off. Number five was used in the tariff debate.

When the bill went to the Senate, edition number five was promptly thrown into the waste-basket as being too misleading to serve as reference, and the Senate issued a handbook of its own. This edition, also, was peppered with errors, and two more editions were gotten out. They were full of inaccuracies. For instance, the Senate committee reported 600 amendments to the House bill, and none of the amendments could be located in the handbook.

In despair the Democratic Senators discarded the handbook and took refuge in spread-eagle oratory. But the total cost of these eight editions ran into the thousands of dollars. It was money thrown away, and it was the taxpayers' money. What stockholder would not seek judicial process if thec orporation in which he owned stock conducted its business in this slovenly manner?

DR. MARY DID NOT GET TO SEE MR. WILSON

Washington—"I have no use for petticoat brigade of suffragists who parade around the streets of Washington and annoy the President," said Dr. Mary Walker, who has recently arrived here from her home at Y.

Dr. Mary, clad in her high silk hat, her Piccadilly collar, frock coat and gray trousers made an unsuccessful attempt to see the President, and the nearest she came to the executive was the "cop" stationed outside the entrance to the White House executive offices. Mr. Officer loaned an ear and Dr. Mary informed him how she was the eral leader of woman suffrage in this country.

"I produced a constitutional argument favoring suffrage for women which justices of the Supreme Court fo the United States have pronounced to be the finest product of its kind in the history of jurisprudence," she informed him.

The "cop," somewhat of a humorist, called it "jurisprune-juice, whatever that is," when questioned about the interview.

And the little woman of Northern New York went on to say that she opposed militancy, but the man with the brass buttons didn't seem quite equal to most of thew ords the champion of men's attire for women was using and retreated.

Use of the Basket Willow Increasing in New York State

From investigations carried on by The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse in the basket willow growing section about Liverpool and Lyons in New York State and in the study of reports of basket manufacturers, it finds that the bulk of the willow ware used in the United States is manufactured in the little town of Liverpool just north of Syracuse. The Liverpool shops use over 3,000 tons of basket willow stock which is 75 per cent of the total stock used in the country.

About a year ago basket willow stock was bringing from $20 to $25 per ton delivered at the Liverpool factories. Today, owing to the cutting off of the foreign supply the prices average about $30 a ton, and that in spite of the increased local production.

There are few industries using the products of the forest where there is as little waste as in the basket willow industry. The only part of the willow stem or cane that is thrown away is the bark. The College of Forestry is planning to carry on investigations in the Eastern Forest Products Laboratory to see whether the bark of the willow does not have some use as a source of certain chemical products.

The returns from land upon which basket willow is grown are larger than the returns from any crop produced on lands in the state outside of nursery stock. Often land of little or no value because of its wet condition can be used for the growing of willow and as culture is not necessary there is practically no labor except at the time of cutting in the fall. Cutting is usually carried on in November and as the canes are taken out they are tied up in bundles of from 50 to 100 each. At the factory the canes are steamed, peeled and dried and are then ready for use. In sections about Liverpool and Lyons it has been estimated that owners of willow holts often take in from fifty to one hundred dollars per acre per year over a growing period of 30 years.

It is probable that basket willow will be used much more extensively in the United States in the near future because of the rapidly increasing prices in various grades of lumber. There is a vast amount of lumber used in New York State for boxing and shipping cases and it is probable that willow baskets will be used more and more to take the place of boxes and other cases, and it is also probable that these baskets will be used for a number of shipments rather than destroyed as many wooden boxes are now being destroyed. This means saving thef orests of the state and the saving of lumber for more valuable uses.

OSBORNE WON'T LEAVE UNLESS "THROWN OUT"

New York—Thomas Mott Osborne, in an address here last night, declared that if he retires as warden of Sing Sing prison it will be because he is "thrown out." He attributes the attempt to oust him to the "intellectual type of prisoner who cannot buy special favors not deserved, under the Mutual Welfare system." He defined this type as a man who would not rob another of his pocketbook but one who would rob the people of a judgeship.

"I have offended these men and am proud to say so," he declared. "I would like to go back to my business and my home in Auburn, but I won't until my usefulness is ended, and if they kick me out I know that will only mean the beginning of my usefulness."

Referring for the first time publicly to the accusations of a criminal nature against himself, Mr. Osborne said:

"On Friday last I was called on, among other things, to explain the accusations against me of vile crimes. The Grand Jury broke down prisoners with the third degree and worried them into accusing me."

Mr. Osborne said he told Governor Whitman before the investigation that it was coming.

MILITARY STUDY IN HIGH SCHOOLS

Assemblyman-elect Welsh Wants Legislature to Sanction Plan; Opposition Comes From Dr. Finley.

Albany— Assemblyman-elect Clarence Welsh of Albany county will introduce a bill early during the coming sesion of the Legislature to provide for military instruction in the high schools of thes tate of New York. He is now engaged in gathering the data.

When the proposed bill is presentde it is likely to meet with strenuous objection from the State Department of Education, since Dr. John H. Finley state commisioner of education, has taken a position which is in opposition to military training in any of the public schools.

Notwithstanding the fact that military training is objected to by Dr. Finley, who believes that there should be no place for it in the public schools. Assemblyman Welsh points out that Cornell University, which is very largely supported by state funds, provides for military instruction for its students and that that institution of learning boasts of one of the largest armories and drill sheds in the state, it being far larger than many devoted to the use of National Guard contingents.

Advocates Preparedness

That there should be a state-wide movement for preparedness and that the fundamental step along that line is military training for the youth, is the belief of Assemblyman Welsh. "Some of the schools in the state which are under the jurisdiction of the State Department of Education already have military instruction as part of the daily course. As one of them, as I understand it, the Manlius School graduates who reach a certain standard are received into the United States Military Academy at West Point without an examination," says Assemblyman Welch.

He calls attention to the fact that since military instruction in schools has proved successful in times when there hae been no thought of war, that this form of training should be doubly advantageous now that the war cloud hangs overhead.

The main objection, it is said, which has been raised against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the state is that the time devoted to it will mean a loss to the other subjects which are being taught. Moreover, uniforms and drills are looked upon as likely to cause lack of concentration upon the part of pupils, male and female alike, so far as the ordinary studies are concerned.

Law Must Be Changed

To put into effect the provisions of the proposed bill, the state education law will have to be amended. This step has always been jealously guarded by the State Department of Education. It has more than once frowned upon attempts to alter the existing law and taken the position that the education department alone should present legislation along educational lines. The result has been that few bills disapproved by the education department have found a place among the statutes.

To provide instruction for high school students would not be an expensive move, Assemblyman Welch says. It would not be necessary to uniform them or to provide them with expensive uniforms. Obselete muskets would answer for the first year cadets. One military instructor for each school would suffice and officers from the National Guard could be designated by the adjutant-general.

The advantage of a four-year military course in connection with high school work would mean that at the end of that time thousands of young men, qualified as officers would be ready for the finishing touches in the art of war and the waning strength of the National Guard would no longer be a source of concern.

As an expresion of his interest in the Red Cross Seal and Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign, President Wilson writes to The National Asociation for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis:

"May I take this occasion to express to you my deep interest in the work of The National Anti-Tuberculosis Association and my hope that its work is growing in efficiency and extent from year to year? May I not particularly express my interest in the Red Cross Christmas Seal, whose sale has been the means of raising funds for the work? FIVE CITIES SEEK G. O. P. CONVENTION

Washington—Most of the members of the Republican National Committee had reached Washington tonight for their meeting Tuesday to decide upon the time and place for holding the 1916 convention of the Republican party. Five cities want the convention, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco and Honolulu. The indications are that the contest will be between St. Louis and Chicago with Philadelphia a little less favored.

There are some Republicans who do not want to go back to Chicago in view of what happened to the party there in 1912. Dissatisfaction has been expressed too, over Chicago's stipulation that any part of the $100,000 it offers unexpended after the convention be turned back to subscribers instead of going to the campaign.

MUNICIPAL TREE IDEA POPULAR

Spirit Has Caught the Town—Merchants Indicate Liberality In Donations of Gifts for Needy Children.

The decision reached by the Chamber of Commerce to provide for the needy and deserving children of this city a Municipal Christmas tree, has "caught the town." While the program of exercises is not available, enough is known to make one wish that he were youthful just once more.

There are persons living who will tell one that the Christmas tree, municipal and otherwise, has lost caste in America. This is an error as any observant one will testify. The idea of a Municipal Christmas tree may be new to Fulton, but that is all. Villages of comparatively small population have them, the nearest and smallest to us being Lyons where Harry H. Barnhart, director of the Community chorus there, wil have charge of the Christmas singing.

The Christmas tree is based on a tradition that origniated in Germany centuries ago. According to an old German tradition St. Wilfred gets the credit of transforming the tree worship of the savage Teutons to a Christian ceremony. It was about the year 725 that he led a party of priests into central Germany for the conversion of the worshipers of the god Thor. Prince Gregor, the grandson of a king, was with him, having been intrusted to his care by the abbess of the cloister Phazel. On Christmas eve they were fighting their way through the snow of thef orest when they came upon the heathen tribe at Geismar. They were asembled under the thunder oak, symbolic of the power of Thor, and were perparing to offer up sacrifice. The white haired priest of the heathens had chosen the young son of the chief as the fairest possession of the tribe, and he was to be offered for the god was very angry and needed the utmost atonement.

As the venerable priest raised his stone hatchet on high and brought it down to kill the boy, who was ready and prepared for the stroke, Wilfred appeared and warded off the blow with his staff. The people were gratified at his saving their favorite and allowed him speech, and he gave them the creed of the Christians. Then he and Prince Gregor took their axes and cut down the thunder oak. As it was ready to fall the lightning came and split it in many parts, and it fell asunder.

The waiting tribe then beheld in its place a slender fir tree, green and sparkling and ordorous. Wilfred bade the tribesmen to bear this tree to the hall of Grunhar, the chieftain, to there assemble about it and make merry. About this first Christmas tree the wild men of the woods first heard the tale of the shepherd boy and the fields of Judah, and it gripped their sturdy hearts. The tribes became Christian and ever after used the fir tree as a token of the day of Christ's birth.

A YELLOW TABBY HAS MET ITS DOUBLE

Seeing things double is a common occurance with some persons, but when it comes to one of Fulton's young business women, the story bears repitition.

Miss Trixie Dix, the popular 2nd street milliner, has a penchant for tabby cats—yellow ones. A few weeks ago Miss Dix became the proud owner of a yellow Tabitha who at times forms a part of the window decorations.

The other evening after closing hours Miss Dix found her pet roaming about and promptly picked her up and took her home. Later in the evening two yellow tabbies, as near alike as two peas, occupied the basket. They purred a la Ford as they contentedly washed one another's face. Small wonder the confused owner of one Tabitha thought she saw double.

Business Men Share Expense of Lighting Downtown Streets

About twenty-five busines men attended a meeting of the Board of Public Works at noon today and discussed a proposition to illuminate the business section at night with a uniform system or ornamental lighting standards, with the result that Commissioner Garrett introduced a resolution to award a contract to the Fulton Light, Heat & Power company to furnish the current necessary.

It is the purpose of the merchants to pay the expense of installing the standards and other necessary equipment, after which the lights will be maintained at the expense of the city.

Mr. Garrett's resolution is worded as follows:

Resolved that thec ontract with the Fulton Light, Heat & Power company for street lighting be amended to include the lighting of South 1st st., Oneida st., S 2nd st., and Cayuga st., as shown on the plan this day filed with the Board of Public Works and approved by said board, at a cost not to exceed $2,228, all poles to be five-light of 220 watts or 188 candle-power, said service to be installed and to commence February 1, 1916, such service to be conditional upon the merchants on said streets installing all poles and fixtures without cost to the city.

PRICES REACH HIGH LEVEL

Wholesale Rates Reach Higher Point Than In Fifty Years — Mills Unable to Meet Demands.

Dun's Review of Saturday: in part says

There is no longer complaint of deferred buying, but of difficulty in meeting the steadily expanding requirements. Consumptive demand exceeds supply in some lines and distributing channels are obstructed by the congestion of freight, rai and oversea shipping facilities still being inaeqate to cope with ther ush of traffic. This tends to act as a brake on commercial progress, yet the forward movement has not perceptibly slackened, either in domestic or foreign commerce. On the contrary, exports, in spite of the shortage of vessels and other obstacles continue in notably heavy volume, while internal trade is further swelled as the holiday season approaches. Development of Christmas business fulfills the most optimistic expectations, and the greater spending power of them asses is demonstrated both by the magnitude of the purchases and the preference shown for the more costly grades of merchandise. This condition is general, every important center reporting a marked growth in retail dealings, but it is most apparent in the sections where the industrial boom has given employment to thousands of men that were formerly idle. Moreover, in many instances increased wages operate to offset the enhanced cost of commodities ,and it is of significance in this connection that the rise in foodstuffs has been less pronounced than in other articles. Because of the continued broadening of consumptive requirements, wholesale prices are now at the highest level in nearly half a century and of late the advance has been particularly striking in iron nd steel, where activity is unabated. Though facilities are taxed to the utmost and production is at the maximum, mills are unble to keep pace wiih the exceptional demands and there was a further accumulation of 1,024,037 tone in the unfilled orders of the leading interest during November. Elsewhere in the manufacturing field capacity operations are also the rule, with New England textile and footwear plants running overtime, and, as an evidence of the augmentation of profits, many industrial corporations have declared extra dividend disbursements. Generally, the credit situation reflects greater ease and the improvement in collections continues a feature, payments practically everywhere being much morep rompt and fewer extensions being asked as the amount of money in circulation increases.

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

MEXICO FACES DAMAGE CLAIMS

Many Millions Will Be Asked by Railroads and Miners.

SMALL INDIVIDUALS ARE HIT

No Record of Losses Inflicted During Revolution on Owners of Private Factories—Railroads Have the Largest Bills—Carranza Government to Be Called on to Pay.

Some of the American interests in Mexico which suffered heavy losses as a result of the revolutions are wondering what course will be pursued in arriving at a settlement of their claims. In a great number of instances it was impossible for the losers to prepare and file an inventory of their losses with the United States consul of their respective district, a requirement which, it is said, the government of General Carranza will demand as a preliminary basis for recognizing claims.

It was recently stated that the Southern Pacific railroad of Mexico alone will present a claim for reimbursement of losses and damages to its propert, amounting to $12,000,000 gold. It is expected that the minority stockholders of the National Railways of Mexico, most of whom are Americans, will demand full payment for their pro rata of losses to that system and that it will not be less than $15,600,000 gold. The British owners of the Mexico Northwestern railroad, which was out of commission for many months at a stretch on account of revolutionary disturbances and destruction of track, will submit a bill for damages aggregating several millions, it is stated.

Miners Suffered Heavily.

The El Paso Milling company, which is extensively interested in the timber and lumber business in the state of Chihuahua, recently filed a statement showing that its losses since the Madero revolution have totaled $863,000.

While the investments of the American Smelting and Refining company in Mexico aggregate several millions, it is understood that its bill for damages will be comparatively small. Despite the disturbance, the company was able to operate its smelting plants and mines a good part of the time.

Many individual Americans and American companies that own mines, ranches, farms, manufacturing plants, mercantile establishments and a variety of other property in Mexico were made the victims of bands of looters and vandals, and these losses, which aggregate millions, are charged up to the government. The American oil interests in the Tampico territory were losers to the amount of many millions on account of the revolutions. These claims are said to be shipshape, a careful account having been kept of all losses by men who have remained on the ground for that purpose.

It is the small American loser in Mexico who probably will have the most difficulty in getting his claim acted upon. There are scores of farmers and other small property owners who were robbed of practically all their movable effects, including cattle, horses, crops, etc. The nearest American consul was perhaps two or three hundred miles away, too far for filing an itemized account with him. How these small claims will be treated remains to be seen. That a great number of them will be presented for payment is certain.

The "Bull."

The origin of the word "bull" as the definition of a confused utterance is doubtful. Some philologists say it comes from the French boule—"fraud"—and others that it is derived from the Icelandic bull—"nonsense." Many definitions have been attempted, but the best probably is that of Sydney Smith. Writing of the difference between wit and "bulls," he says: "Wit discovers real relations that are apparent; 'bulls' admit apparent relations that are not real. The stronger the apparent connection and the more complete the real disconnection of the ideas the greater the surprise and the better the 'bull.'"

A Very Old Rule.

The oldest mathematic book in the wor 1 is believed to be the "Papyrus Rhind" in the British museum, professed to have been written by Ahmes, a scribe of King Ra-a-us, about the period between 2000 and 1700 B. C. This "Papyrus Rhind" was translated by Eisenlohr of Leipzig, and it was found to contain a rule for making a square equal in area to a given circle. It was not put forth as an original discovery, but as the transcript of a treatise 500 years older still, which sends us back to approximately 2500 B. C., when Egyptian mathematicians solved, or thought they had solved, the problem of squaring the circle.

A Suffrage Yell.

East side children of New York recently greeted the suffragists who came down to hold street meetings in that part of the city with a novel yell which went:

Strawberry shortcake,

V-i-c-t-o-r-y.
Are we in it?
Well, I guess.
Votes for women,
Yes, yes, yes!

RATS COSTLY TO STATE.

Pennsylvania Zoologist Makes Suggestion as to Way to Fight Pest.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Rats are costing the people of Pennsylvania over $5,000,000 a year, over half of which is lost by farmers and fruit growers, according to State Zoologist H. A. Surface, who has launched a campaign of education to get rid of the pests with the approval of Secretary of Agriculture Charles E. Patton. Dr. Surface says there are fifteen ways of getting rid of the rodents and reports the "city folks" as much interested as the farmers.

Among the ways he suggests are encouraging snakes, owls, hawks and weasels, where they do not do too much damage in other directions, train cats to be barn pets instead of house pets, use poisons, keep rat terriers and finally form rat killing clubs.

HIS GRAVE HIDDEN.

Burial Place of Revolutionary Soldier Is Unfrequented.

Franklin, Ind.—In a secluded spot in the Glen Park cemetery, four miles east of Greenwood, lies the body of John Parr, who, as far as known, is the only Revolutionary solder buried in Johnson county. A white stone slab, almost covered with weeds and underbrush, was photographed by visitors at the cemetery, and the headstone revealed the following inscription:

JOHN PARR,
Died Sept. 7, 1850.
Aged 92 years, 2 months 23 days.
He served five years in the army of the Revolution and was in the battles of Monmouth, Brandywine, etc.

Mr. Parr was a relative of the Parrs of Johnson county and Newcastle, Ind.

ENRAGED BUCK FIGHTS.

Six Men Throw Animal After a Long Fight—Aged Keeper Hurt.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Felix Lagard, seventy, one of the animal tenders at the zoo in Irvine park, was seriously injured by a big buck deer which attacked the keeper when he entered the deer inclosure.

Mr. Lagard battled for nearly an hour before help came. The rescuers, Eli Nelson and Ansime Paquette, had no weapon and they grappled with the enraged animal. After a twenty minute battle three other men reached the deer inclosure, scaled the fence, and the five men succeeded in throwing the deer and tying its feet to its horns.

In trying to free itself the animal broke its neck and died. Lagard was taken to the hospital.

DECATUR (GA.) WOMAN GOOD POSTMISTRESS

Succeeded Her Husband in Cleveland's Days.

Savannah, Ga.—By efficiency which neither Republican nor Democratic administrations can doubt, Mrs. Kate W. Kirkpatrick, postmistress at Decatur, has held office longer than any other postoffice head in the country. When she was recently reappointed on Congressman William Schley Howard's recommendation she had held office for twenty-one years.

Through all that time she has seen that Decatur and all the country roundabout get its daily mail without trouble or delay and has kept the needs of her community so persistently before the postoffice department that Decatur never fails to get its share of new carriers and equipment, although, of course, it needs any number of things, as all postoffices do.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick's husband was appointed postmaster at Decatur by Grover Cleveland, but he died soon after taking office. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was then commissioned to succeed him, since which time she has continued to do the work he was forced to lay down. In a way it has been a work of love—a work that her husband began and she is completing. But at all times it has been an ambitious effort to make the Decatur postoffice second to none in efficiency.

Though without political influence, never once has she been opposed for office. With simply her record for good work for recommendation, she was reappointed, once by McKinley, twice by Roosevelt, once by Taft and now by Wilson.

HAS "THE RARE SENSE."

St. Paul Dog Anticipates the Wishes of Its Master.

St. Paul.—A dog that anticipates the wishes of its master is boasted of by A. M. Paulson, 1016 Marshall avenue.

The latest achievement of the animal was brought about when Mrs. Paulson was recovering the pantry shelves with newspapers.

The dog watched while papers were cut and fitted to the shelves. Suddenly it made a dash out of the kitchen door and over the fence. In about five minutes it returned with a newspaper in its mouth.

Nail In Cow's Heart.

Martins Ferry, O.—A valuable Guernsey cow owned by N. S. Donner, after an illness of two years, is dead. An autopsy showed that a nail caused death. The point of the nail was protruding through the central valve of the heart, and the tissue around about it showed little irritation.

The Villa On the Hill

By EUNICE BLAKE

Sherbourne was one of those young men into whose laps an unjust fate pours boundless wealth.

Sherbourne's pile was about twenty millions. At twenty-one he found himself in possession of it all, and it was so well invested that he had nothing to do but put it in bank as fast as it came in. He soon tired of this and hired a man to do it for him. Then he went abroad to see the world.

One day while running about in an auto in Italy he saw a girl crossing the road ahead of him. She was dressed neither as a peasant nor a lady, but between the two. In her hand she carried a basket of berries. On a hill near by was an imposing villa. Sherbourne was wondering who lived there when he reached the girl crossing the road.

"Can you tell me, signorina," he asked in a mixture of Italian and Latin, seasoned with a little English, "who inhabits that villa up there on the hill?"

"The Princess Angela Farini."

"Much land with it?"

"Many acres, signor."

"H'm," said Sherbourne half to the girl and half musingly. "I wonder if it is for sale."

"Are you an American?" she asked.

"Yes. Why do you ask?"

"You Americans wish to buy everything you see. I don't think you can buy this place, however."

"I presume there is no harm in trying, is there?"

"Oh, no!"

"I don't think land can be worth much about here. The more a person owns the worse he is off on account of the taxes."

"You might make the princess an offer. She is alone in the world, her parents being dead. She is much attached to the place, but on account of loneliness would prefer city life."

"Thank you very much for your information." And Sherbourne drove on.

When Sherbourne came to the entrance of the place he turned in and ascended the hill, admiring the expanding view as he rose. He thought that he would like to settle down on the place, collect a library and spend his days reading. He had not yet reached an age where a man realizes that a home is no home at all without a woman in it. At any rate, he made up his mind to buy it, and when Bob Sherbourne made up his mind to buy anything he considered it as good as purchased. Driving up to the entrance of the villa he alighted.

"I have called," he said to a liveried lackey who admitted him "to ask if the Princess Farini would consider an offer for her place."

The flunkey showed the visitor into a cosy reception room, then disappeared. Presently he returned and asked how much the signor would give. Sherbourne made an offer of 500,000 lire ($100,000). The lackey, after several trips to and from the would be purchaser, at last brought him a card of a real estate agent in Rome, with a message that the agent would deal with him. He went to Rome and finally purchased the place and everything in it for half a million dollars.

He had occupied it a month when one day while driving by a small villa near the foot of the hill on which his place stood he saw the signorina he had met in the road some time before. She was dressed like a lady and was watering some flowers. Sherbourne pulled up, lifted his hat and told her that he had made the purchase of which he had spoken to her, adding that he was sorry he had done so—he had found it lonely. The lady said that she had heard the princess was sorry she had sold her home. After some further conversation, during which it came out that the lady knew the princess, she said she would see her and learn if she would buy it back. Sherbourne was to call for a reply the next day.

When he called he was invited into the villa, and negotiations were opened, this time the princess dealing through her friend instead of the agent. The friend proved attractive, and Sherbourne prolonged the bargaining in order to enjoy her society. At the end of a month she had him enthralled. He proposed to her and was accepted.

Sherbourne now declared that he would not sell his villa. He and his bride would occupy it together. To this his fiancee agreed, but later said that she would not like to offend the princess, who had been kind to her, and Sherbourne was obliged to resell his place. His fiancee, however, informed him that the princess had graciously permitted her to be married in the villa on the hill.

When the day of the wedding came round Sherbourne drove to his former abode, and when his bride appeared he noticed that she wore a coronet. Surprised, he asked if her friend the princess had loaned it to her for the bridal.

"I am the princess," was the reply.

"You the princess!" exclaimed the groom.

"Yes; the day I met you I was roaming about my property in common costume, as is my habit, to pick berries. I saw that you were a rich American and concluded to sell my property to you, which is all I have of worldly goods. Then it occurred to me to get it back with you also."

"You need not take me with it unless you like," said Sherbourne, miffed.

"I like."

Christmases In Various Lands

DEVONSHIRE, England, noted for its apples, boasts a curious custom. On Christmas eve the farmer and his son stand beneath the oldest and best apple tree, both bearing a jug of cider, and sing a certain folk song.

After passing the cider jug around they betake themselves home to a good supper and much merrymaking.

The Jamaica negroes collect all bits of odds and ends of finery with which to array themselves on Christmas eve and, choosing a king and queen, follow these leaders about, making as much noise as possible.

The custom of giving gifts at Christmas came not from the presents of gold and silver given to the Christ child, as many believe, but from an old custom of priests putting on board of all outgoing ships a box of alms.

The box was opened at Christmas tide and masses said for the givers of the alms.

Woman's World

The Pioneer Woman Judge of the National Horse Show.

LADY BECK.

The first woman invited to judge at the national horse show was Lady Beck. At the show, which was held in Madison Square Garden, New York, she officiated with Mr. James G. Marshall of the Riding club in awarding the prizes for undocked saddle horses of the thoroughbred type.

Lady Beck is an Englishwoman who has ridden to hounds in Leicestershire, as well as in Canada and Virginia. At the last national horse show she rode her own hunters over the jumps in Madison Square Garden.

What she knows about hunters was in evidence at the last international horse show in England, where three horses from her stable defeated the pick of the British entries for the capital prize of the show.

Lady Beck is the wife of Sir Adam Beck, a director of the international horse show. Their home is in London, Ont.

Desserts For Children.

Fairy Apples.—Pare and core enough tart cooking apples to fill a baking dish; cover them with sugar and put a little cold water in the dish, also several slices of lemon and two cloves; then pour a little melted butter over the apples and bake them until tender. Serve them cold, with a blob of fruit jelly put on the top of each and whipped cream about them.

Ambrosia.—This delicious dessert requires grated cocoanut, sliced oranges and bananas, sugar and a wee taste of lemon juice. Fill a dish with layers of the different fruits, putting sugar over each one, and continue in this way until the ingredients are all in. Let the dish blend while in a cool place before serving. Fresh cocoanut is needed, and if the milk of the fruit is sweet this may be added to the dessert.

Brown Sugar Sandwiches.—For the children incessantly craving sweets brown sugar is an excellent thing to keep in the house. Spread it thickly on buttered white bread and put the slices together so as to make narrow sandwiches.

Quick Gingercake Pudding.—Get any sort of small or large ginger or molasses cakes from the grocer and cover them with a custard made of boiling hot milk into which several eggs are beaten up. Pour the milk gradually into the eggs, stirring vigorously all the while; sweeten and pour over the cakes, allowing them to stand until they have drunk up a good deal of the custard. Serve warm or cold.

The Polite Mother.

There is but one way to teach good manners to children—good [illegible] that is, that not [illegible] and are not mere polish and sham and hypocrisy—but one way, and this is to practice good manners yourself.

All over the land unthinking women are still saying to the casual guest: "How good of you to come!" "Oh, no, you are not late." "Well, it doesn't matter a bit." But to the child it is this old formula: "What did I tell you!" "Don't let me have to speak to you again!" "Thomas, shut that door!" and a hundred other inexcusable crudities.

These inconsistencies of ours rob the child in a hundred ways. They wear upon his nerves as only illogical, irrational, unharmonious and inconsistent things can do. The child brought up in a home of rude, crude manners goes into the world gravely crippled, harmed and handicapped. He has been robbed before he begins his journey.

Capes For the Traveler.

Capes are doubly blessed by the traveler and by fashion, for the need of an auxiliary traveling wrap is great, and the cape aptly supplies it. Capes are being interpreted in many and various ways, some of which are charming, others, speaking frankly, grotesque. Among the first, however, must be rated the delightful examples made with an attractive little waistcoat, fastening with large and distinctive buttons.

The Geese Were Ducks.

Some geese had strayed on the railway in Yorkshire and were observed by a traveler, who, fearing that they might be run over, said to one of the porters on the platform:

"Who owns the geese, my man?"

"Them's Duck's," the porter replied.

Again the question was asked, with the same reply. Somewhat annoyed, the traveler called the station master and told him the story, stating that he full well knew the difference between geese and ducks.

The station master laughingly replied: "The man is quite right. Those geese are Duck's. They belong to Mr. John Duck, the farmer."—London Tit-Bits.

SUNDAY NIGHT SUPPERS.

CRAB MEAT COCKTAIL.—Fill cocktail glasses with fresh crab meat and cover with the following dressing: One teaspoonful of freshly grated horseradish, one tablespoonful of tomato ketchup, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of tabasco and seasoning to taste. Mix well and pour over cocktails.

Kidney In Bacon.—Cut six thin slices of bacon about six or eight inches long. Mix in a basin one teaspoonful each of chopped onion and parsley, add one tablespoonful of breadcrumbs, a pinch of nutmeg, pepper and grated lemon rind. Sprinkle the bacon with it, put a kidney on each slice and roll it round them, tie with a piece of string and bake in a hot oven, or cook in a frying pan for a few minutes. Serve very hot.

Tomato Cocktail.—Select firm, ripe tomatoes. Put them into a wire basket and plunge into boiling water for a moment; remove the skins. Put aside in the refrigerator until very cold. At serving time cut into cubes, season with salt and pepper and add enough mayonnaise dressing to cover the tomatoes. Serve very cold in tall glasses or small glass cups. Sprinkle a little chopped parsley over the top of each.

Beef Olives.—Cut slices of leftover roast beef very thin. Spread each slice with the following mixture: Breadcrumbs, roast beef gravy and chopped parsley. Roll and simmer in gravy and water for half an hour.

Oysters With Cheese.—Take a cupful of grated breadcrumbs and brown nicely in a little butter; butter a shallow dish and sprinkle with the breadcrumbs. Drain about three dozen oysters and dry with a clean towel and then season. Place them one by one on the browned breadcrumbs, strew chopped parsley over them and grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle lightly with breadcrumbs again and then place in the oven. The layer of breadcrumbs will be brown in about fifteen minutes if the oven is hot enough. Serve with drawn butter and lemon garnish. If desired, a little lemon juice may be poured over the oysters before placing in the oven.

Delicious Pear Pickle.—Chop fine one peck of peeled and cored hard pears, six large onions and four red or green peppers from which the seeds have been removed. Cover with three cupfuls of vinegar, one teaspoonful allspice, one teaspoonful cloves, one teaspoonful ground ginger, two heaping tablespoonfuls of salt, one tablespoonful of mustard seed or ground mustard and one cupful brown sugar. Stir well, bring quickly to a boil and then simmer until all is tender.

A Mode For Young Women.

One-piece frock in chiffon broadcloth trimmed with black velvet buttons, which correspond effectively with the green of the cloth.

Ingenious designers can always find some new way of expressing the one-piece frock. This model is fashioned of Bolling green chiffon broadcloth, trimmed with buttons of black velvet. The vest, which is finished with a high collar, is of cream colored silk gauze. If desired, the tabs which overlap the belt may extended to form large pockets. In medium size the dress requires 3 yards 54-inch material, with ⅜ yard 36-inch gauze for the vest.

Confining to-day's lesson strictly to the cutting of the dress, the home dressmaker is advised to lay her material full length on the cutting table, then fold it exactly in half. Along the lengthwise fold place into position first the back gore, which is about one-half the length of the front gore from the end of the goods. To the left of the back gore is laid the standing collar, provided it is made of broadcloth. As gauze is suggested, however, lay the collar pattern on the gauze as it is shown here on the cloth. Near to the end of the material and on a lengthwise thread to the left of the back gore, the front gore is placed, with the shield to the right. The back of the waist, the collar and the belt are laid on the lengthwise fold, while the front, the sleeve and cuff are placed exactly opposite, on a lengthwise thread.

For a sleeve shorter than the one illustrated cut off lower part of sleeve on small "o" perforations.

In taffeta, faille or voile this little frock makes up exceedingly well. It is easy to slip on and comfortable to wear, therefore small women as misses will accord it ready favor.

The one-piece dress never will lose its place in the wardrobe, it is too valuable for that. The chic effect of this model is the little inside piece with its frilled high collar which can always be freshly laundered and made to look new and bright.

A Matrimonial League

By SARAH BAXTER

"I think, girls," said Miss Clara Mansfield to four other young ladies who were sipping afternoon tea with her, "that if something is not done and that, too, pretty soon, we're all booked for old maids. No young men come to this town, and those who are here are leaving. There are still left enough of them to provide us with husbands, but they have grown up beside us, with nothing occurring to make them matrimonially inclined toward us. Those men who have married have chosen wives elsewhere. It provokes me to see some girl with neither brains nor beauty brought back here by one of our fellows simply because she was new to him."

"No such thing, Clara," put in Margaret Stark. "The reason why girls from other places are getting the fellows away from us is that they go for them, while we sit here idly sucking our thumbs. But you are right when you say something must be done or we shall all be old maids."

"I've heard of a custom somewhere," said Dora Elkins, "that gives the advantage to the girl. If a woman wants a man she paints a red heart on one of her visiting cards and pins it on to the coat or the hat or something of the man she wants. Now, how would it do for us to form a league of heart pinners, each girl member pledged to pin a heart to some man?"

"Horrible!" exclaimed Lucy Jones, throwing her eyes and her hands up at the ceiling.

"Better than everlasting spinsterhood," said Evelyn Treborne.

The upshot of the dialogue was the formation of the league proposed, each girl making the pledge, though it was decided to leave out the card of the one pinning on the heart. Modesty would not stand this. Besides, an anonymous heart would excite curiosity. But the intent of the token was permitted to reach the young men who were to be the victims. Miss Mansfield had a brother who was wanted by one of the young ladies—which one she was not told—and she volunteered to give him the notice.

One night the league was discussed at the club by the young men. Every man claimed that the idea was preposterous and that if he received a heart he would pay no attention to it. But there was not a man jack of them but feared he would not receive one. The next evening when the men strayed in at the club Jim Mansfield confessed that he had found a heart pinned to his hat when he took it up to go out in the morning. He said that the lady could send him a dozen hearts if she liked; she would get no reply from him. At the same time he was racking his brain for a plan to find out which girl had sent him the heart.

The next day Stevenson's attention was called to a red heart pinned to his coattail. How it got there he did not know, but supposed it had been placed there by a small boy hired to do the job. The same evening there was a small social gathering at the house of one of the league, and two other men on going to the coat room found hearts pinned to their overcoats. One of these men when about to put on his hat found another heart in the lining.

Alas, this was the cankerworm that was destined to spoil an excellent plan. Ned Somers, who was blessed—or cursed—with two hearts at his disposal, instead of keeping the fact to himself boasted of it to his companions. This excited the spleen of Arthur Beem, who received no heart at all.

As for the girls, the apple of discord was also thrown among them. The two girls who had set their hearts on the same man each began a secret inquiry as to who her rival was. Neither was long in gaining the required information, and soon after the discovery they were not on speaking terms. Evelyn Treborne had sent a heart to Andy Skinner, which he surmised came from Jenny Brown. He accused Miss Brown, who indignantly denied the charge. She spoke disparagingly of Skinner to Margaret Stark, who had sent him the heart, and this made a break between the two girls. Within a week after the establishment of the league there were half a dozen quarrels between the different persons sending and receiving hearts, including some of the men who had not been honored by being wanted.

Then came Trimmingham, a stranger, to the place, and, hearing of the league and having secured the names of the members, he wrote each one a note stating that he had received a red heart; that she was the only girl in the world he wanted, and if the heart came from her he had one to give in exchange.

For a few days after this every member of the league was in a flutter. Five notes went out to Trimmingham from five different girls, each acknowledging that she had sent him a heart. Then two girls compared notes, and there were two expressions.

"Well, I declare!"

"The horrid thing!"

That led to more comparisons, and the league was broken up.

Meanwhile Trimmingham had left for parts unknown. And it was well for him that he had, for there were five girls each and every one of whom was ready to stick pins into him. Some of these young ladies afterward [illegible] husbands, but not in the place they lived. [illegible] "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country."

WOUNDED CRY FOR MOTHERS.

Some Keep Up the Pitiful Pleadings Throughout the Night.

A psychological feature at Trieste that is similar to other fronts is that the wounded in the field always cry for their mothers. Officers who have fought on the western front say that the wounded who lay in the woods of Argonne and elsewhere on this front made the battlefield resound all night long with their calls for mother, and they observed particularly that both the Germans and French did the same and that this was particularly true of new troops and in the earlier part of the war.

Officers from the trenches said it was heartrending to hear the pitiable cries after charges, especially at night, those of the Italian soldiers crying "Mamma mia, mamma mia!" often mixing it with sobs and dying lower and lower as unconsciousness approached. But many kept up the call for hours.

Answered Too Well.

Judge Parry in a recent article on "Rufus Choate, Advocate," says on occasion Choate would meet with his Sam Weller. Defending a prisoner for theft of money from a ship, a witness was called who had turned state's evidence and whose testimony went to prove that Choate's client had instigated the theft.

"Well," asked Choate, "what did he say? Tell us how and what he spoke to you."

"Why," said the witness, "he told us there was a man in Boston named Choate and he'd get us off if they caught us with the money in our boots."

The Eskimo Baby.

The clothing of the Eskimo baby is often very scanty. In fact, one occasionally sees a baby being carried in its mother's hood with only a cotton shirt on, despite the fact that the thermometer registers 20 degrees below zero. The mother's hood is the baby's cradle. Being made of seal or deer skin, it is warm and wind proof. The infant also has the benefit of the heat of its mother's body and is out of harm's way. If it were laid in a basket cradle in the [illegible] it would be very much in the way and would always be in danger of [illegible] the [illegible] round the door by day and night, ever ready to pick up a dainty morsel.

DONS OF OXFORD WORK AS NAVVIES

Oxford, England.—Prominent in Oxford's war work is Sir William Osler, the professor of medicine. He is in charge of the Red Cross hospitals established in the Examination Schools building.

One of the internes and a valuable assistant of Sir William's is Dr. W. C. Davison, a Rhodes scholar from New York city, who went to Servia on Red Cross work for six months last year. He is now working on the open air sleeping quarters for wounded in College gardens.

Professor Gilbert Murray, Professor W. J. Sollas, Professor F. Y. Edgeworth and Professor R. R. Marrett have engaged themselves at a nearby arsenal to take the places of the regular ordnance men and load trucks and shift shells for three ten hour days a week.

There are fifty professors and 275 others, too old or otherwise unfit for military service, who form this volunteer organization, called, after one of its founders, Gilley's army.

"Gilbert Murray is a private in the ranks, and it's great to see him," said one of his fellow dons. "He was paired off with a corporation road mender, and a rough one, too, to shift 176 pound cases of soap to trucks for Calais and the front. By the end of the day the pair got quite chummy, and when after each trip to the truck with a case of soap the road mender would say, 'Steady on, mate, and easy does it,' nothing daunted, the famous translator of Euripides replied, 'Easy it is, mate!'"

The don went on to tell me that the professors, lawyers, clerks and others of sedentary habits had got over their first handicap of tender hands and aching backs, and they now do four times as much as an equal number of regulars in one of their ten hour days.

"Oh, they jolly well keep steaming all the time," he said. "Of course, they wouldn't be able to keep it up every day, but they are enthusiastic because they are volunteers."

Professors from high Tory Oxford are playing the part of navvies to aid in the munitions work of Liberal Lloyd-George, but it is only one example of the many at Oxford, where war is making manual laborers of all classes.

Another is that of the wealthy lady who lent a piece of ground as a novel way of giving work to the unemployed and at the same time furnishing a crop of potatoes. The unemployed who were at the same time unfitted by age or physical health for military service got busy and planted potatoes. But by the time the crop was ripe more permanent jobs left vacant by war had fallen to their lot, and the lady found herself with a crop of potatoes in the ground, but no unemployed to get them out.

She called for volunteers from her friends at the university, and the result was that professors, tutors and dignified masters of colleges left their libraries and went out to hoe spuds, while some of the debutantes busied themselves with sorting the crop into grades.

The crop was advertised for sale. Many of the dons who had dug the potatoes took a personal interest in their ultimate destination, so that the lady cleared more than $100 for the military hospitals.

Carthage's Great Snake.

The ancients firmly believed in monster serpents of all kinds and of both the land and marine species. During the wars with Carthage a great snake is said to have kept the Roman army from crossing the Bagrados river for several days. The monster swallowed up no less than seventy Roman soldiers during this combat and was not conquered until a hundred stones from as many different catapults were fired upon it all at one time. The monster's skull and skin were preserved and afterward exhibited in one of the Roman temples. The dried skin of the creature was 120 feet in length, according to Pliny.

EASTERN SYCAMORE LARGEST SHADE TREE

Worthington (Ind.) Prize Winner Is 150 Feet Tall.

Washington.—"That the largest shade tree in the United States, as brought to light by the prize contest held by the American Genetic association, should turn out to be the eastern sycamore is not surprising," according to a statement issued by the forest service.

"The sycamore has long been regarded as the largest deciduous tree in North America, and its range of growth is hardly second to that of any other broad leafed tree, for it can be found from Maine to Florida and as far west as Kansas," says the report.

The prize winner was a sycamore at Worthington, Ind., which is 42 feet 3 inches in circumference and 150 feet tall. Foresters are recommending the sycamore for city planting because it is peculiarly able to withstand the smoke, dust and gases incident to urban life.

It is as resistant to insects as almost any other species and is a quick grower. At ten years a healthy sycamore usually is large enough for shade as well as for decorative purposes.

There is hardly any eastern species so picturesque. With its mottled bark and its stature and conformation the sycamore has a marked individuality and cannot be mistaken for any other species either in the summer, when the foliage conceals its structural form, or in the winter, when the leaves are absent.

A common objection to the sycamore as a lawn tree is its habit of dropping its leaves before the autumn. From this characteristic it is sometimes called a "dirty tree."

The chestnut and the black walnut are the largest nut bearing trees in this country. The contest disclosed a chestnut tree near Crestmont, N. C., which is thirty-three feet four inches in circumference and about seventy-five feet tall.

The contest brought forth photographs and authentic descriptions of 337 trees in all parts of the United States, making a distinctly valuable contribution to existing knowledge of native trees. It was found that in all probability there is no living elm larger than "the great elm" at Wethersfield, Conn., which is twenty-eight feet in circumference and about 100 feet tall and is estimated to be 250 years old.

Many remarkable specimens of species which ordinarily attain only small sizes were unearthed by the contest, furnishing new records of maximum growth. A sassafras was brought to light at Horsham, Pa., which is fifteen feet ten inches in circumference at four feet from the ground. Not long before this a Georgia town claimed that it had the largest sassafras tree in the world, though this tree was only something over seven feet in circumference.

A white birch was found in Massachusetts with a girth of twelve feet two inches. A pecan was found in Louisiana with a circumference of nineteen feet six inches, and a catalpa in Arkansas with a girth of sixteen feet.

WHALE BATTLES WITH SHIP.

Monster Nearly Founders Whaling Vessel.

Seattle, Wash.—Showing the effects of a desperate battle with a huge sperm whale while ten miles south of Mount Edgecumbe, Kruzof island, near the entrance of Sitka sound, the whaling steamer Star III., Captain L. P. Halls, Gunner G. Earling, reached Eagle Harbor after a successful season.

While taking one of the big mammals, which members of the crew described as "just like an ocean liner," the big fellow charged the steamer, damaging the gunwale, second towing chock on the starboard side and bending and crumpling a plate in the bulwarks for a distance of ten feet. The weight of the whale nearly swamped the little steamer.

357,515 PERSONS PAY INCOME TAX

Washington—The personal income tax was paid during thel ast fiscal year by 357,515 individuals, who turned in to the government $41,046,[illegible] more by nearly $13,000,000 than the tol paid by the 357,598 making returns the year before, according to the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, made publis last night.

Theg reatest increase shown was in the amount paid by those subject to teh normal tax, a jump from about $12,728,000 in 1914 to about $16,559,000 in 1915.

Incomes exceeding $500,000 paid this year about $6,439,000 compared with about $3,437,000 last year. There were 82,754 individauls subject to the normal tax. 127,448 who reported incomes between $4,000 and $5,000 and 173 whose returns were made on a basis of incomes of $500,00 or more.

Under the corporation income tax 229,445 returns were made, a decrease of 17,464 from the previous year ascribed by the report of various conditions ,including disturbed business conditions incident to the war in Europe and the trouble in Mexico. The corporations paid $38,986,952 or about $6,627,00 les than in 1914. The report says examination showed that but few corporations had purposely falsified their returns or sought to evade the tax.

Frauds upon theg overnment through the use of artificially colored oleomargarine are said to have reached the total of $17,692,410, of which only $4,61,052 was within the assessable period. During the year $751,000 wasc ollected on account of these frauds, and more is expected.

The total revenue collected from all sources by the bureau amounted to about $415,681,000. The emergency tax law brought in $52,000,000 the tax on distilled spirits other than those distilled from fruits about $13[illegible],000 compared with about $150,00,00 in 1914 and the tax on fermented liquors increased from about $67,000,000 paid in 1914 to about $79,000,000 paid this last year.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

[illegible] All the Time

[illegible]

Any man who draws back from co-operation does it because he is AFRAID of his fellow-man. He may be AFRAID of them in some ways, but neither one will [illegible]

A man may [illegible] from co-operation with his fellow-man, because he is afraid they will take away his possessions and make demands upon him that he does not want to meet. That position is PLAINLY A SELFISH one and may further be based on an inner suspicion that his possessions ARE NOT HIS OWN FAIR SHARE.

Or a man may refuse to co-operate with all men because he feels them not to be as high minded or as loyal as he is himself. But such an attitude is self-righteousness, pure and simple. The real SAINT is irresistibly drawn towards co-operation by his conviction that most people are BETTER than he is—even as the apostle for example could call a runaway slave sincerely a—brother beloved.

The fellow who sits in the front row in church on Sunday; who tries to lead in church affairs whenever there is a chance, to show the [illegible] that he is SUCH a good citizen and then [illegible], because the interests of his FELLOW MEN demand certain things to be done—that fellow is a hypocrite in the literary sense of the word and the quick[er] the minister gets him out of the church, the better it is for the church.

Brotherhood is not meant for Sunday only; it is meant for every day in the year. Wake up; be a real brother to your fellow-man, no matter who or what he is. Sometimes you will find the other fellow so much better than you are yourself. Beware, because you may get down; you don't know your future and some time you may need a little co-operation yourself and we know that you HATE to be turned down. Beware.

The real Christmas spirit is in the fellow who spends his money at home; he is doing a favor to ALL the people.

If you think that you can run the affairs of the Chamber of Commerce better, why don't you make application for a job and show what's in you.

The citizens of Fulton should demand that merchants do not advertise in foreign papers for the simple reason that it will keep all the money in Fulton—and we need it HERE for improvements and not in Syracuse. The Chamber of Commerce of that city is able to help Syracuse out of difficulties; it does not need Fulton's help.

Who is paying for all the improvements in the City of Fulton? The taxpayers of course. NOT the people of Syracuse or Chicago. Keep your money rolling around here and we can have more and better improvements.

When you help Fulton, you help yourself and in as much as it is an axiom that we are all born more or less with that spirit of helping ourselves first, it follows that you shall have to help Fulton, otherwise you are not even true to yourself and that's about the biggest mistake any man or woman can make.

Mayor-elect's Appointments Stamped With Public Approval By Men of [illegible] Parties and Factions [illegible] own the names of the men who [illegible] ing the two years following Jan. 1, [illegible] this morning, setting at rest all [illegible] ch have made the political horizon become quite [illegible] times during the last month.

In polling public [illegible] the appointments, The Evening Times has found that the [illegible] of Mr. Herbert W. Adkins as City Chamberlain [illegible] approval of a wide circle of social and business friends. Mr. Adkins enjoys the distinction of having acquired an education in accounting, which is deemed an essential factor in conducting the office to which he has been appointed. Prior to his acceptance of a position as salesman for the Gilbert & Nichols company, he was associated with the Gage Milling company as bookkeeper and confidential secretary. He is a member of the B. P. O. E. and is a musician of ability.

C. Milton Allen, jr., comes into the office of City Clerk with many favorable qualifications. He is well educated and is recognized as one of the city's most progressive and hustling young business men, having been conected with the C. M. Allen Excelsior Works since leaving his studies. Mr. Allen's friends aspired to have him become an alderman, but the sentiment of the Fourth Ward willed it otherwise. Like the gentleman sketched above he too is a member of the B. P. O. E., also occupying a prominent place in the life of the Presbyterian church.

The selection of Attorney William S. Hillick as the successor of George M. [illegible] popularity is attested by the number of congratulations received by the genial lawyer today. While Mr. Hillick has all along scouted suggestions that he would be the mayor-elect's appointee, few persons there were who believed for a moment that his qualifications for the office and the work he performed in the interest of Mr. Lewis would not receive the reward that has been given to him. Mr. Hillick is also a prominent member of the B. P. O. E. and a singer always in demand at musical events.

James R. Somers is Mr. Lewis's selection to succeed W. Lawson Woodbury as Commissioner of Charities. His selection is today one of the most popular of the list of names to be submitted by the mayor-elect for confirmation, and it is the general belief that he will imbue the office in the City Hall in a manner creditable to himself, the taxpayers and those whose unfortunate condition compells them to seek aid. Attorney Somers is given to much deep thinking and, being a close student of human nature, he should be able to create and maintain public conference in an important branch of the city's government.

While it has been understood generally that Dr. G. G. Whitaker would not be reappointed as City Physician by the mayor-elect, the nomination of Dr. A. L. Hall as the successor of the venerable physician of the Third Ward created a lot of surprise. Other guesses have been rife and many minds have had different names under the glass for the place. At any rate, the appointment is popular, as Dr. Hall's worth os a citizen, a physician and a public official are too well known to need more than mere reminding. The Evening Times felicitates the City Physician-elect, adding the belief that when duty calls the public may rest asured the new official will obey.

The praise by the mayor-elect on account of the foregoing appointments is endorsed apparently by the men who mix in city affairs in respect to the following gentlemen:

Board of Assesors—Watson H. Merriam, Andrew Dwyer and Fred O. Howell.

Board of Education—Langdon C. Foster, Member at Large; Italo Achilli, Member from the Third Ward, John R. Sullivan, Member from the Second Ward.

Board of Fire and Police Commissioners—Charles E. Stewart, Ernest M. Mead and Charles M. Allen.

Board of Public Works—Arthur W. Wiltsie, Patrick J. O'Brien and H. Putnam Allen.

Board of Governors of Hospital—George B. True, Thomas H. Marvin and Frederick A. Gage.

John W. Youngs will again serve as City Marshall.

Two British Divisions Annihilated According to War Office Advices

London—The British and French troops have successfully carried out their retirement from Serbia across the Greek frontier, and by an arrangement with the Greek Government a clear road has been left for them to fall back on Saloniki, which is being organized as a base, and where the entire force will be safe under the guns of the fleet.

The German officers report of yesterday claims that "approximately two British divisions were annihilated" during the retirement, but this is considered here as exaggerated. Accounts from Athens and Saloniki say the retreat was carried out in an orderly manner without heavy losses. By the destruction of railway bridges and roads, and by stuborn rearguard actions, in one of which two companies of the Inniskilling regiment sacrificed themselves to save their comrades, the Bulgarians were kept at a fairly safe distance.

A force of 40,000 Bulgarians and an equal number of Austro-Germans is being concentrated between Monastir and the Greek frontier, according to a dispatch to The London Times from its Saloniki correspondent. Thisf orce is said to include a considerable number of cavalry troops.

The question now arises whether the Bulgarians and Austro-Germans intend to follow the British and French troops into Greece, and what action the Greek Government will take should they do so. The impression gained from dispatches emanating in Athens is that neither the Bulgarians nor the Turks, who are reported to have arrived near the frontier, would be welcomed in Greece, and that therefore if it has been decided to follow the Entente Allies the task will be undertaken by Austrians and Germans.

Minstrel Show Marked for Its Smoothness at Last Performance

The second and last performance of the Elks Minstrels in this city was greeted by a capacity house at the Quirk theatre last night. About 75 members of the order from Oswego were present. The visitors were the butt of several slams thrown at their city by some of the comedians, and George Pomphret's parody on Oswego was heartily applauded by the visitors.

The performance started without a hitch promptly at 8:15 and terminated at 11 o'clock. On the previous night the final curtain was not rung down until close to 11:30, but changes were made in last night's performance which would eliminate many of the time-killing periods of then ight before.

The Elks' Orchestra of eleven pieces, led by Morton E. Reynolds, opened the show with the selection "The Girl Who Smiles." Messrs. Cornell, Woodbury, Kepmston, Pollard, Powers, Webb, Radder, and Hare, in black face, twinkled their feet to the tune in a very modern way. The entire assembly on the stage sang the opening chorus, after which "The Tulip, The Rose and You," rendered by Mr. Scott was presented.

Van Buren, an end man, singing "Listen to That Dixie Band" was a treat and his parodies on the song were also good. "Somewhere

A BEDLAM OF PROFANITY

New York is perhaps a city of silence as compared with Chicago. Compared with most places it is a center of noises innumerable and incessant. Its ears are penetrated, its nerves hammered by a perpetual anvil chorus, bangs, clangs, toots, yells screams, yelps, howls, roars, all discords and dissonances, a day and night of Bedlam. The clamor never sleeps. The ordinances against it snore. Police Commissioner Woods has waked them and the police up.

Unnecessary noises must be suppressed. The police must warn; after repeated offenses summon. Superfluous racket of the railroads or car lines to be reported by policemen to precinct commanders, by them to the commissioner, by him to the Public Service Commission. Taxicab "barkers," howlers of "extras," too excruciating hullabaloo of hawkers, clatter of ashcans, vocal excesses of milkmen, eloquence of parrots, many old familiar nuisances are on the commissioner's list of suppressibles.

At least one is lacking. The tempest of profanity which is loose in New York streets ought to be chained.—N. Y. Times.

THE MIDNIGHT LAMP

"In the Mark Hanna days" says the New York World "business men were told that no college professor could teach them anything. If a gentleman even under suspicion of having an acquaintance with the midnight lamp presumed to advise them, they regarded him with levity or anger."

There came a time after McKinley had made this country more prosperous than at any time in its history when the standard of living had been elevated so that workingmen might raise their sons and daughters to aspire to better things than their parents enjoyed, that the country listened to college professors on business and applauded the theorists' denunciation of business. tI goes without saying that the same man with all the learning and degrees he may get in college is the better for it. But it is a mistake that the learning and degrees of one man make him more fit in another man's life work than the man of practical experience. Mark Hanna may have had his faults, but no university has yet turned out a man who brought so much material happiness through the shaping of governmental policies as did Mark Hanna. On the other hand the highbrow magazine economists brought about distrust of business, war on legitimate trade and a state of confusion which grievously harmed the toilers. The professional economists feared for the souls of the people, though the economists themselves scorned religion, scoffed at the conventional things of the age, such as marriage, and created class hatreds. The country went backward industrially and the cheap magazines went bankrupt. The midnight lamp with the rattled brain brought misery. There is a midnight lamp which the man who has succeeded in business has burned night after night. That lamp is as much the symbol of wisdom as the college professor's illumination. The country has tried both.—Watertown Standard.

ALWAYS ASKING QUESTIONS

Ruskin once said a good and wise man at his work is always asking questions and wanting to know more; that he is aware he knows very little; that he perceives that there are many more wiser than he; and he is always asking questions, wanting to learn. Undoubtedly this great and learned thinker had observed many kinds of men—men, good bad and indifferent, yet he observed most carefully the good and wise men— the men who ask questions.

However that may be, we can rest assured that all honest people are asking questions, and all intelligent people want to learn. The person with the button-up mind is but the dross in the gold. We cannot let the waste in human nature fret us, hold us, tie us or embitter us. Today not alone are communities going through a refining process, but the nation and the whole world is turbulent with action.

Real men and real women are now shining with their purity of thought through the mist of sordid, selfish, blood-thirstiness like diamonds from the soil. Here and there in civic movements in communities men and women are laying aside purely selfish interests and are finding themselves in helpfulness to others.

In our own little city the civic spirit is slowly trying to break the bonds of grudges and suspicion. Whatever is accomplished will be due to the measure of the stout heartedness of its pioneers in the movement. Criticisms, cold and cutting as a steel tool, will appear as the work moves forward. Many will no doubt feel discouragement—and even doubt, yet would the master painter pause in his work, or the skillful engineer cease his plan when the ideal was within grasp, simply that an untutored mind's expression be realized?

Watch the straining process going on in this community. Here is neither all of gold, neither is all of dross. The dross will be gradually brought to the surface. Life's lesson is working under our very noses—and, "all the world's a school house."

YOU ARE MASTER

You are the master of your own destiny, and not the creature of any environment.

You attract the things that are in harmony with you and your heart, your soul and your mind. You cannot win while think failure; you cannot attract ambitious men to you by being lazy. You cannot be regarded as ruggedly honest and constantly associate with unprincipled people. If you would improve your circumstances, firs improve yourm ind; and your mind will improve your circumstances.

The mental and the moral laws of life are the same as the natural laws. If we sow thistles, we cannot hope to reap roses. If we plant in our minds discord, trouble, treachery and strife, we are sure to have some one hand us a basket of grapefruit.—The Silent Partner.

GLOVERSVILLE PREACHERS OBJECT TO PLAYGROUNDS

Gloversville ministers are unanimously opposed to the city accepting the playgrounds from Hon. Lucius N. Littauer if there is a condition attached to the gift that provides for the Sunday opening of the grounds. The Ministerial association at a meeting by a unanimous vote registered its disapproval of the acceptance on the part of the city of the playgrounds, if, as a condition of the gift, the grounds must be kept open Sunday afternoons. A letter expressing the sentiment of the association will be sent to the mayor and the common council for consideration at the next meeting. The question of the city accepting the gift from Mr. Littauer was discussed at the last meeting of the council and the matter was finally laid on the table after several of the aldermen had expressed themselves as opposed to the Sunday opening stipulation made by Mr. Littauer. It is practically certain that the council will vote not to accept the playgrounds at its next meeting.

The question as to whether or not the grounds should be kept open on Sunday has raised widespread discussion and expression of opinion throout the city and a strong sentiment in favor of the proposition is evident.

GOOD COMPANY TOURS WITH FISKE O'HARA

Fiske O'Hara in a new play "Kilkenny" from the pen of Augustus Pitou, sr., is one of the treats promised local theatregoers in the near future. The play is said to fit O'Hara's pleasing personality better than anything he has yet appeared in and he has ben provided with a budget of new songs in which his sweet tenor voice will be heard during the action of the play. Manager Pitou has surrounded his star with a capable company and provided a scenic embellishment that is said to be quite handsome. O'Hara comes to The Quirk December 30th.

Singing the Praise of Chamberlain's Tablets

Mrs. Ernest Crooks, Camillus, N Y., says, "I have been singing the praise of Chamberlain's Tablets in the ears of my neighbors and friends ever since I used them about five years ago. Prior to that I had suffered a good deal from indigestion sick headache and biliousness due to a torpid liver. Chamberlain's Tablets acted like magic, affording me quick relief. After using two or three bottles of them I am in perfect health."

YOUTH AND AGE

By F. A. MITCHEL

She was born a flirt. When she was a little girl she preferred the company of boys rather than girls; not that she was a tomboy, for she was very feminine. When she was thirteen she captured a boy of ten and gave him a genuine case of love. At fifteen she enthralled a man of thirty. At eighteen her adorers were numberless. At twenty her mother insisted that she should stop flirting and marry.

She promised to think about it, but before she had finished her thinking she was twenty-four, and by that time a woman is hard to please. At twenty-six she was not only harder to please, but had fewer eligible men to choose from. Then she woke up one morning to find herself an old maid.

She did not like the prospect before her. She declined to accept it. She set her jaws and resolved that she would marry for a home and children. She did not agree with the poet that "knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." She believed she could select a partner who would fulfill all the conditions of a desirable husband. As for romance, bah! Had she not been very nearly in love with Charlie Ashurst, who had afterward gone to the bad? She had been engaged to Tom Chester, who was now a fat, baldheaded pig. Her mother had interposed between her and Jimmie Ludlow, who had married and had been divorced for cruelty, well established. This was or had been romance. No more of it for her. She wanted a man who would go to business in the morning, return in the evening and not bother her for those little attentions husbands usually desire. She would lavish her affection on the children.

She met a man a few years her senior who seemed to fill the bill. On meeting her he seemed interested in her. He did very little talking, but was a first rate listener. So far as she could discover there was not a spark of romance in him. She determined to marry him if she could.

Realizing that the coquettish ways of a girl in her teens would not avail her now, she tried to make herself acceptable to him as a companion. She talked sensibly, acted sensibly. She admitted that she had made a mistake in not marrying when younger and would like to rectify the error before it was too late. Any time was time enough for a home, but would soon be too late for children. She also intimated that the man she wanted was one who would make her comfortable. Love after marriage, she had heard married persons say, was, after all, but an intensified companionship.

He neither assented nor dissented from this. He looked at her curiously while she was saying it, and she wondered what he was thinking about. Perhaps it was his reticence and her own curiosity that gave her an interest in him, the strength of which she did not realize. She noticed that, though he said very little, what he did say inspired confidence. After an evening spent in his company she felt her inferiority. He paid her few compliments, but when he did praise her she felt that he meant it and she deserved it.

Notwithstanding that they were much together and she had admitted that she wished to marry, he did not propose. Either he was obtuse or he preferred to remain a bachelor. Nevertheless his visits increased in frequency, and at last he was with her every other evening. Finally he said to her:

"Your philosophy has converted me. A marriage based on common sense is worth a dozen with no other foundation than infatuation. That's what it is, infatuation. Like you, I wish to marry for a home and children."

"It's coming at last," she said to herself.

"At my time of life I look for the woman who is most likely to make my home comfortable. I have been considering two women—not that I have any assurance that I can get either—yourself and another. I think the other will make me the more comfortable, though she is not as attractive as you."

This was too much for her philosophy. She looked at him, trying to find voice to make a reply, but feared to betray herself by a quivering lip.

"I would like you to meet my fiancee," he continued. "She is not intellectual, but practical. One thing about her that has gone far to decide me in her favor [illegible]"

At last she found voice to speak.

"Your words are positively brutal!"

He burst into a laugh, at the same time taking her into his arms.

"Am I more brutal," he said, "than the girl who drove Fred Jones to attempt suicide?"

"Fred Jones!"

"Yes. I am that Fred Jones whom you lured to a proposal eleven years ago and who left you to jump into a river, from which he was unwillingly rescued. He recovered from a desire to fill himself with dirty water, but has never recovered from his love of the dear girl who sent him forth that night to"—

"Heavens!" she interrupted. "I can remember a good many of them, but I can't recall any one by the name of Jones."

"It doesn't matter. The age of romance with us has passed. We need each other now. In our youth we didn't; the world was ours."

They were married, and every one said, "What a lackadaisical couple!"

Christmas Dreams.

Were every Christmas of which we have been present at the celebration painted accordingly to nature, what a gallery of pictures! True that a sameness would pervade them all, but only that kind of sameness that pervades the nocturnal heavens. One clear night always is to common eyes just like another, for what hath any night to show but one moon and same stars—a blue vault, with here a few braided and there a few castellated clouds? Yet no two nights ever bore more than one family resemblance to each other before the studious and instructed eye of him who has long communed with nature and is familiar with every smile and frown on her changeful, but not capricious, countenance. Even so with the annual festivals of the heart.

"Thoughts that like spirits trackless come—and go" is a fine line of Charles Lloyd's. But no bird skims, no arrow pierces the air without producing some change in the universe. No coming or going is absolutely trackless; nor irrecoverable by nature's law is any consciousness, however ghostlike, though many a one, even the most blissful, never does return, but seems to be buried among the dead. But they are not dead, but only sleep, though to us who recall them not they are as they had never been, and we, wretched ingrates, let them lie forever in oblivion. How passing sweet when of our own accord they rise to greet us in our solitude!—Christopher North.

Chronic Constipation

This disorder is often due to a torpid liver. All that is needed is a few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets to invigorate the liver. Mrs. Wm. H. Clark, Hannibal, N. Y., writes, "I was a victim of constipation, sick headache and poor digestion when I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets a year ago. I took two bottles of them and they strengthened my digestion, regulated my bowels and toned up my system generally."

Telephone Man Asks, Will Wireless Be Profitable?

The following statement made by Theodore N. Vail, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. on that company's obligations toward wireless communication will be found to be very interesting, not only to persons intimately connected with the telephone business, but to the general public as well.

To make wireless communication understandable and to make plain both its possibilities and limitations, the governing conditions and principles which to the layman are somewhat abstruse, must be explained. There exists, through all space, some "ether" or other medium through which can be transmitted light, heat, and electrical wave or vibrations, or some such movement or activity as has all the manifestations of waves or vibrations.

Broadly speaking, the science of electricity is still undeveloped and unrevealed, but from its manifestations, laws or rules of action have been deduced, and its action and effect are calcuable.

The wireless telephone and telegraph, or operating radiograph, is the "generation" and "control" of electrical vibrations of great intensity thrown out into space, which seem to proceed in every direction, seem to conform to the curvature of the earth, and seem to penetrate most material substances. They spread and fill space as do the waves of sound. Their intensity rapidly diminishes as do sound vibrations, probably in the ratio of the increase of the space filled by them, as they pass out and onward, and like any sound, are intense or loud at the source, but fade away into silence as distance increases, so that at the distant receiving station, they are of slight tenuity.

There is, as yet no practical method of deflecting or reflecting these waves, as is done with light or sound, and probably because of their great length there never will be.

The existence of these waves has long been known, but until Hertz discovered or invented a practical "detector" it was impossible to convert them into any tangible form. Since then many methods have been discovered, some one or more of which is utilized in the various wireless telegraph systems.

These waves are of different lengths frequency and intensity; can be controlled so far as impulses or variability are concerned; and can be used for telephonic or telegraphic or signaling purposes.

The wave length and frequency can be availed of to get a certain range of selection; but selection is not secrecy, as any receiver can be adjusted to all lengths and frequencies.

The intensity of these radiators is so great that any large number of sending stations erected near each other would seriously interfere with and confuse each other's outgoing transmission, and even a small number would absolutely destroy the tenuous incoming vibrations. and all could be destroyed by extremely high tension and high frequency radiation in close proximity.

The nearest thing that can be compared to such a situation is a steam engine blowing off steam at high pressure when someone nearby is trying to converse. Under such conditions conversation is impossible.

The most interesting and most useful characteristics of the radio vibrations— those which make posible distant telephone communication —are that these vibrations, unlike the electrical speaking vibrations over the wire, retain their peculiar and essential speaking form even to the very faintest activity at the point of actual disappearance or loss to detection and therefore, when magnified by the telephonic appliances used by the Bell system, the speech is distinct whether it be in distant Honolulu or Hong Kong or Paris or Petrograd.

The great obstacles to dependable usefulness with commercial posibilities—the causes which confine this great achievement to particular undependable uses—are natural conditions as yet and probably forever uncontrollable.

In space, or through the "ether" and the earth, there seem to be continuous electrical "storms," activities or manifestations, which for the sake of clearness may be called natural disturbances. These natural disturbances are sometimes mild and not very serious, while at other times they are of such intensity and activity as to absolutely nullify and destroy the artificial vibrations of the wireless stations.

For long periods these natural disturbances will continue of sufficient intensity to make it impossible to send the artificial radiographs, or at least to receive or detect them. In the midst of these storms there will be lulls or moments of quiet or comparative quiet, and it is at these times that it is possible to use the wireless or radio for telegraphic or telephonic communication. In the quiet moments it is possible to communicate without much effort. In the less quiet moments, by repetition and continuous effort, messages and conversation can be got through. In the moments of great activity all effort is useless.

The coming and going of these natural disturbances are known only by their effect upon the artificial vibrations with which they come in conflict; no clouds or prevailing winds barometer or thermometer, indicate their coming or enable a forecast to be made. They fill, or seem to fill, all space, and even if their origin and course were determined, would probably be as uncontrollable as is the water in the midst of the great ocean when in its wildest moments; you might float upon it, but not with fidence.

Wireless telephony can be compared to attempt to carry on a ltelephone exchange business over one great conductor connecting everyone, and over which all telegraph, all artificial electrical disturbance caused by transmission or power lines, and all the natural electrical disturbances were in full play at the same tinme. These are the conditions that govern radiograph activity and limit its possibilities.

There are only two ways of carrying on wireless telephony: One, by getting far away from all artificial disturbing causes and having only natural disturbances to contend with; or by the use of one of the limited selectives which have only the interference of the natural disturbances.

There are, however, many and important, probably as many and as important as can attach to any absolutely undependable thing. Distant communication will be possible some of the time. Short-distance communication will be possible sufficiently for communication with isolated places or things not otherwise to be reached.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has from its beginning been trying to build up an inter-communicating instrumentality, universal and interpendent, by which everyone could reach every other connected with it—a service so well adapted to the use of all and of such great pecuniary and other advantage to all, rendered at a price so well within its value to all and so well within, the reach of all, that none are too poor to take advantage of it or too independent to get along without it. This is the Bell system.

Whatever there is to add to this use or to this value or to increase its universality this company proposes to develop.

As fast as conditions make it possible, or potential business makes present extensions of prospective value to the system and to the public either directly or indirectly, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. will extend, enlarge and amplify its system in every way that scientific research and development make possible and social or business demands make desirable.

To this end the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. will, so soon as the necessary construction and equipment can be assembled, extend the universality of its system by wireless stations at selected points on the coast so located as to enable persons and places not able to be conected in any other way to maintain comunication with the world through the Bell system.

There have been and wil be many statements of what has ben done and promises and prophecies as to what can be done, but so far nothing in the way of actual public communication has been done in wireless telephony except through the instrumentalities of this company, and the probable future of what can be done is subject to the conditions outlined in this statement. Theodore N. Vail, President.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condititon of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"Their tracks are like the New York Central's, and that's about as near perfection, I suppose, as they make railroads."

CLERKS WANT HIGHER WAGES

County Clerk's Office Force Makes Known to Supervisors Their Desire---Five to Benefit.

Yesterday's Oswego Times reports Monday's meting of the Board of Supervisors as follows:

Increases in the salaries of four clerks in the County Clerk's Office are proposed in a resolution offered at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors last night. The resolution was offered by Mr. Courbat of Hastings and provides that the increases take effect, January 1, 1916.

Deputy county clerk, from $1,200 to $1,500; special deputy and court clerk, fro $840 to $1,000; index clerk, $720 to $1,000; mortgage tax clerk, $720 to $1,000; The present incumbents are respectively, John J. Little, Louis A. Coulter, Schuyler C. Brown and Claude H. Burlingame. They have been reappointed by County Clerk Stanton for a term of three years.

Accompanying the resolution was a memoranda giving grounds on which to base the increases. On motion of Mr. Jackson of Palermo the resolution was made a special order for Thursday's session.

Memoranda Filed

The memoranda states that the work of the office has greatly increased the past five years for which the clerk has received no additional fees. Among the matters cited are the following:

Under the Federal Naturalization law, three copies of first papers, two copies of second papers and two copies of naturalization certificates must be made. One-half the charge for those papers goes to the county clerk. Already there have ben 800 declarants

Under the Domestic Relations law and the issuance of marriage licenses, copies of the licenses issued by all town and city clerks must be made; affidavits of magistates and clergymen are indexed and recorded and sent to the State Department of Health. The supplies are sent by the county clerk to the town and city clerks. No fee is received.

The office is required to index and file all town clerks' bonds. No fee is received.

Must keep a record of all indictments and certificates of conviction of offenses against the excise law and certified copies of same sent to the State commissioner of excise; also records of all excise complaints dismissed by theg rand jury must be forwarded. No fees.

Records of conviction in every court of record in the county must be sent to the Secretary of State. No fees.

All court orders, county and supreme court bonds must be indexed and filed for which no fee is received. The county clerk is obliged to pay the recording fee.

New Indexing

With the adoption of the new system of cross-indexing all deeds and mortgages are indexed according to location, block No., lot and tract as well against each party. No additional fee is allowed although the system has required a lot of extra work.

In issuing hunting licenses supplies are issued to the town and city clerks; accounts are kept with each town and city clerk. Complete reports are made monthly to the State Conservation Commission. Town and city clerks receive 10 cents on each license issued and this fee is paid the county clerk on the licenses issued from that office. Ther emainder of the license fee is forwarded to the State.

The office distributes to each town and city clerk the reports of the executive departments of the State government. No fees.

Under the new system of accounts much more detail work is required. No fees.

Under the probation system, certificates of conviction of persons placed on probation must be furnished the probation officer. No fees.

Since the completion of the Barge Canal, maps, records, etc., sent by the Attorney General must be filed. No fees are collectible.

Monthly records are kept of all notaries' oaths taken, and reports sent to the Secretary of State, State Treasurer and Governor. No fes.

A State official who recently visited the office declared that it was among the most satisfactory of any in the State. Examiners sent here by State Competroller Sohmer commended the office and its administration.

In conclusion it is stated that three-fourths of the salary of the mortgage tax clerk is paid by the State. None of the employees could be dispensed with ... the work of the office has now practically doubled in five years.

The matter of increasing the salary of the clerks has been several times under consideration but has always ben turned down. A caucus will be held on the matter before formal action is taken.

SEALER FRENCH FINDS OBSERVANCE OF LAW

County Sealer of Weights and Measures F. H. French of Fulton read his annual report which had been offered by Mr. Gayer of Fulton.

The salary of the office is $1,000 with an allowance of $400 for expenses. The sealer provides his own conveyance, an automobile. During the year there was a debit balance of $68.69, being principally the expenses of the State convention.

Mr. French issued 215 warnings; investigated 9 complaints and made 3,480 visits. The sealer tested 1,677 pieces. He reported that of measures 97.46 per cent. were found correct; weights, 91.5 per cent. There had been a big improvement in the correttness of scales; 77.95 per cent. being found correct, as against 42 per cent. in 1912 and 74 per cent. in 1914. He recommends that the installation of scales be taken up by the State. Of 333 tests made of coal, hay, etc., all but 38 were found correct.

Mr. French reports that most of the goods shipped in were found to be of correct weight. He said that most of the dealers were complying with the law. Hucksters and peddlers were complying with the law.

The report was received and ordered printed in the journal.

Mr. Vincent presented a petition from the New York Telephone Company for correction of special franchise assessments in Oswego Town. The reduction in the towns is asked from $55,000 to $44,500, and in the city of Oswego from $80,000 to $64,800. This is base on a decision of Supreme Court uJstice Chester of Albany.

SUPERINTENDENT OF POOR MAY BE MADE APPOINTIVE

Supervisor Harris of Mexico introduced a resolution at yesterday's session of the Board, which, if adopted when it comes up again on Friday, will make the office of Superintendent of the Poor one of appointment instead of elective as at present.

The resolution provides that hereafter the office be filled by appointment made by the Board of Supervisors; that the clerk certify the resolution to the assemlyman and senator from this county, with a request that legislation to make the necessary change be enacted.

Mr. Harris said after the session that he had no knowledge of the sentiment of membbers of the proposition. Personally, he believes that the county would benefit by the change. "The office of poor superintendent should not be made the football of politics," said Mr. Harris. "If the county gets a good superintendent it should retain him. In this way it will be possible to continue a good man in office. And if by any chance a man unfitted for the place should secure it the Board of Supervisors would have the authority to remove him."

CHILD WELFARE BOARD'S PLEA

Mrs. Fred G. Whitney of Pulaski Makes Earnest Plea for $6000 Appropriation for Welfare Work.

The Oswego Times in reporting the result of yesterday's session of the Supervisors takes into account the address made by one of this county's prominent women, Mrs. Fred G. Whitney, of Pulaski, who appealed to the Board for an appropriation of $6,000 for Child Welfare work.

Mrs. Whitney said that she wasn't afraid of men as she had worked in the same office with fifty men at the capitol, Albany. The only time she has ever appeared before a public body was at Albany when she asked the late Speaker Merritt for an increase in salary which was granted.

Mrs. Whitney said that she showed her interest in the work by plowing through the snowdrifts to get to the station, this morning. She said that the Oswego county board was a practical body and not from the viewpoint of the philanthropist.

Mrs. Whitney said that she knew what it was to be poor and to make her way in life, and therefore could sympathize with and understand the desire of mothers to keep their children near them in they ounger years of their lives. She said that this board was practical working body, animated by thep rinciples of strictest economy in trying out the law in this county.

The conservation of our children was the most important work that can be done. Mrs. Whitney said. Making the boys, good, honest, respectable citizens and voters and making the girls good women and mothers was the highest and best work for the State.

She spoke in terms of praise of orphan asylum but said it was not possible for them to turn out the best citizens. The children cannot, of necessity, be expcted to have the opportunities for development of their best sides. The stigma of the orphanage remains, even after the child has gone out into the world, she said.

Keeping a child in the home with a mother's love and guidance and giving him the opportunity of contact in the public schools with other children in better circumstances makes for better ideals for the poor child.

Mrs. Whitney said that most of the 30 applications thus far came from the city of Oswego. She gave estimates as to the cost of supporting one or more children in the city and the country. She estimated that total applications would be about 100 per year, of which about 55 would be allowed. With an average of $100 per family the total would be $5,500 for the year with the remainder of the $6,000 for expenses, etc.

Chairman Siver expressed the appreciation of the board for Mrs. Whitney's informing address.

Mr. Vincent moved that the special order be continued until Thursday. Carried.

HIGHWAY GET BIG BENEFITS

Secretary Hugo Tells Autoists $2,000,000 Is Devoted to Good Roads. Was Dined Last Night.

New York—Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State, guest of over five hundred special automobile inspectors of this state and their friends at a testimonial dinner at the Waldorf Astoria last night, was presented with a large chest of silver. The affair proved to be the largest gathering of automobilists of the year. The Automobile Club of America and the New York State Automobile Association were each represented by their officers and directors. Large delegations, occupying special tables, were present from many counties and cities, including Nassau, Kings, Westchester, Montgomery, Jefferson, Dutchess, Oswego and Albany. The affair, non-partisan, was most representative.

The speakers included Secretary of State A. P. Langtry of Massachusetts, Secretary of State D. S. Crater of New Jersey, Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo; former Secretary of State Mitchell May, William McAdoo, Chief Magistrate of New York, A. G. Batchelder of the Automobile Club of America; Professor Charles Terry of Columbia; Senator Elon R. Brown of Watertown and F. J. Treanor of New York. Prominent among the guests was a delegation of Congressmen from Washington headed by Congressman Luther W. Mott of Oswego.

In addressing the banqueters, Secretary Hugo discussed the automobile traffic problem at length, calling attention to the fact that during the past fourteen years the registrations had increased from 964 to over 233,000 with an income today of over $2,000,000 which goes entirely for State Highway purposes. Mr. Hugo emphasized that the present administration was one of co-operation and that he welcomed suggestions that might lead to the enactment of laws that would better deal with the traffic problems in our larger cities.

The occasion afforted each of the speakers an opportunity of complimenting Secretary Hugo on his excellent work in handling the automobile bureau, the largest in the world. One speaker stated that in urging and providing for the signalling out of careless and reckless drivers, Mr. Hugo is pursuing a policy which is meeting with the approval of ninety-nine per cent of sane road users.

TO OUR FRIENDS:

Friends an Asset

The Electric Light Co., regards the good will of the community as its most valuable asset, and, therefore, bends its efforts toward keeping old freinds and making new ones.

To this end, while extending a general invitation to responsible corporations, firms and individuals to do business with our company, it does not mislead them with promises today which tomorrow it may be unwilling to fulfill, and it makes no promises of any kind, at any time, which it has not the ability to perform.

Earnest of this principle of the Fulton Electric Co., is given in the personnel of its directorate, composed of bankers, merchants, and representatives of other important interests, whose responsibility, standing and reputation in the community are guarantee of the faithful performance of their duties as directors of the company, as well as of their knowledge of the needs of customers.

We believe that the good opinion of the community and neighborly feeling for the company are worth having. We desire our neighbors to be our friends, so that even if we cannot do business with them, either for reasons on their part or reasons of our own, nevertheless we may profit by their report of us.

The friends of the ELECTRIC CO., number more than its customers and we fully acknowledge our indebtedness to them for their share in the splendid growth of the Electric Co.

For Young Folks

A Helper at the French Soldiers' Doll Show.

For many months the disabled soldiers of France have been making dolls, singly and in groups, and they have been aided by the artists made destitute by the war. Now these dolls have come to America; more than 10,000 of them, and they are to be exhibited and sold in the largest cities for the benefit of the war sufferers. The first exhibition was held in New York city and was highly successful. Soldiers' Toyland, as the exhibit is called, is made up of a wonderful display of the most beautiful dolls imaginable, and the little folks of society were present to admire and help along the cause of charity. The little girl in the picture is Miss Janis Guiness, and she sold flowers to aid the poor children of France. On the whole, the display is an amazing one, and as many of the groups and dolls are based on historical personages and scenes it is also of educational value.

New Year's in Scotland.

On the morning of New Year's eve in certain small towns of Scotland the children take great pleasure in playing "hogmanay," a game as peculiar as its name sounds. Just read for yourself and see.

First, the little boys and girls wrap themselves in large sheets, so wound around them that a huge pocket is formed right over their little stomachs. Then they stroll along the streets in little bands and call at the homes of the wealthier people, asking for a dole of wheaten bread.

Invariably each child is given a piece of oatcake, which is known as his "hogmanay." Needless to say, the good women of the households have anticipated such visits from the children and have cooked large quantities of the cake in readiness for their coming.

Hidden Sweets.

The name of a candy filling or flavoring is concealed in each of these sentences:

1. For this soup you need pepper; mint, too, is excellent for flavoring.
2. I was very sorry to find Donovan ill and very weak.
3. I call my dog Choco. Later I will explain why.
4. A subject of which I am very fond, anthropology, keeps me busy.
5. If you need a piano U. Gates has them for sale.
6. Had Marius and Cinna money when they ruled Rome?

Answers.—1, peppermint; 2, vanilla; 3, chocolate; 4, fondant; 5, nougat; 6, cinnamon.

Remarks by Mrs. Needle.

"I just wanted to remind you girls that Christmas is coming. It seems a long way off, but my sharp eye tells me that it is not so far off as it seems. Santa Claus and I think it would be a fine thing to make the dolls a whole new outfit for Christmas. Don't you think that would be fun? And the next rainy afternoon that comes along let's get the doll's grandmothers to cut out a set of underwear. Threads and thimbles, I can hardly wait to begin!"

Rigmarole.

A very amusing game is called rigmarole. One person starts telling a story and stops in the middle of a sentence in an interesting or exciting part. The one on the beginner's left continues, and so on until all have had a turn. It creates a lot of fun when the players have good imaginations. Each may have a given time to tell his or her part.

Beginning Right.

Papa he has been a-sayin'
We should start the new year right,
An' not quarrel in our playin',
An' mind mamma day an' night.

An' he said there's no disputin'
That whatever we might do
On the first day, sure as shootin',
We would do the whole year through.

An' I saw the chance was splendid
To do something right away
That, until the year was ended,
I would like to do each day.

An' on New Year's [illegible]
I [illegible]
An' [illegible]
So I'd always have them right.

A Continual Christmas

Let no pleasure tempt thee, no profit allure thee, no ambition corrupt thee, no example sway thee, no persuasion move thee to do anything thou knowest to be evil; so shalt thou always live jollily, for a good conscience is a continual Christmas.—Benjamin Franklin

Fasting at Christmas

When Cromwell ruled England he issued an edict against all festivities at Christmas. The festival was altogether abolished and the display of holly and mistletoe and other emblems of the happy time held to be seditious.

The Yule Log

The observance of lighting the Yule log from the remnants of the previous Christmas log can probably be traced to the ancient belief in the efficacy of fire, which was supposed never to be extinguished. It is a link in the chain that binds us to bygone times when, to quote Max Muller, "the hearth was the first altar, the father the first elder, his wife and children and slaves the first congregation."

Woman's World

A Feminine Expert In Railroad Rates.

MRS. GEORGE ALEXANDER MOSSHART.

Railroad rates, it might be readily assumed, are not in the sphere of woman's comprehension, but there is at least one suffragist who has proved her capacity to master that dry and technical subject.

She is Mrs. George Alexander Mosshart, president of the Washington Woman Suffrage council and treasurer of the committee of influential Washington women who are in charge of the arrangements which are being made for the forty-seventh annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage association, to be held in Washington, Dec. 14 to 19, inclusive.

In her unmarried days Mrs. Mosshart was secretary of the Nebraska state railway commission and one of the foremost women rate experts in America. Over initials which did not betray her sex she is said to have contributed many an article to the railway journals of the country on the field which she has made her own. Naturally enough, she believes that there are no phases of government which women cannot study and master.

Since her marriage to a well known Washington correspondent, however, Mrs. Mosshart has given up her profession and contented herself with suffrage work. She is an ardent admirer of Dr. Shaw and a strong advocate of the broad nonpartisan policy of the National American Woman Suffrage association.

Foolishment.

I knew a lad named Hiram Tate,
Who lived in Auburn, up the state;
Though strange it seems, I do declare
He could not boast of auburn hair.
—New York World.

Laces Still Good.

Customer—Are these shoes too far gone for repair?

Bootmaker—No, I don't think so. A new pair of uppers, with soles and heels, will make 'em all right. The laces seem fairly good.—Buffalo News.

Pretty Satisfying.

I've tried a lot of breakfast foods—
Hay, oats and all the rest,
But for my pleasure and my needs
A stack of wheats is best.
—Peoria Journal.

Fooling the Dog.

"Look, Miss Mamie, your dog's not muzzled."

"Sh-h-h! He thinks he is. I took it off while he was asleep."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Branded!

He began to switch his tail.
"Well, I never," was his comment,
"There's a mule that's been in jail."

A Glorious Evening Gown.

CORSAGE 6562 SKIRT 6185

Pale pink chiffon and lace are combined in this gown, which has a bodice of satin.

There is nothing more delectable than the new evening gowns, an example of which is shown in the accompanying illustration. The frock is carried out in pale pink chiffon combined with handsome white lace, and the bodice is of pink satin. In medium size the costume requires 5 yards 40-inch chiffon, 2 yards 36-inch satin, 3 yards lace flouncing 18 inches deep and ⅞ yard lace 7 inches wide for the bodice. If a satin foundation is used about 4⅝ yards 36-inch material will be needed.

The home dressmaker will find it worth her efforts to make the waist, for it can be used separately with dressy skirts. Beginning with the underbody first the underarm and shoulder seams are closed as notched. Hem the back next, then gather the lower edge of the front and back and sew peplum to lower edge.

Adjust the lace trimming piece to position on front and on the right back, letting the upper edge of the trimming rest along crossline of double "o" perforations in underbody, bringing single large "O" perforation at upper edge of trimming piece to center-front, and single small "o" perforation to center-back.

Now, tack the shoulder strap to position, bringing small "o" and single large "O" perforations to corresponding perforations at shoulder seam in back; stitch the lower front and back edges underneath the upper edge of trimming piece, bringing the front and back ends of strap to the single small "o" perforations in underbody; front of strap indicated by line of large "O" perforations.

Gather the outer front and back along the shoulder and under-arm edges between double "TT" perforations. Close the right under-arm seam as notched, drawing gathers; and stitch boning about 4¼ inches long underneath. Stitch boning about 7¼ inches long under gathers at left under-arm edge in back, and stitch tape the same length under the gathers in front; draw gathers to fit and finish for a closing. Stitch tape about 2 inches long under gathers at shoulder, drawing gathers to fit tape and finish for a closing. Adjust to position on underbody, shoulder and under-arm seams even; lower edge of back over the lower edge of underbody.

Close the short puff sleeve seam as notched and gather on crossline of small "o" perforations. Draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape underneath. Sew in armhole, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Plaited chiffon may be used instead of lace for the flounce on the underskirt.

Simple and lovely is this frock of figured crepe Georgette, having a skirt finished with a deep ruffle of faille. It is designed for afternoon wear.

Some of the most charming frocks of the season show combinations of sheer, soft crepe Georgette and shimmering faille, the silk of service and beauty. In this design the two materials are used most effectively. The upper section of the skirt, the blouse and the sleeves are of the crepe, while the deep flounce is of the faille. In medium size the frock requires 3 yards 40-inch faille and 4 yards 36-inch crepe Georgette. If made entirely of voile, broadcloth or wider material 4 yards 54 inches wide will be required. When made of narrower fabrics it is necessary to cut the skirt flounces on an open width of the goods, piecing the side. The upper sections and the waists, however, may be cut from a fold of the material.

If 54-inch material is used all of the sections of the pattern may be laid on the goods after it has been folded in half so that they will be cut in duplicate. The pieces that are laid on the lengthwise fold are the upper skirt, the front and back flounce sections and the front of the waist. The piecing for the upper skirt section will have to be divided so that a part may be added to each side of said section. The piecing for the back flounce is laid along the selvage edge of the goods, while the back and sleeve are cut on a lengthwise thread.

If the underbody is desired with a V-shaped neck cut out the front and back on indicating small "o" perforations. The double "oo" perforations indicate a round neckline. Cut off the front edge of outer front on triple "ooo" perforations, if the waist is desired with open front. The double "o" perforations on the gathered sleeve show how it may be cut off for shorter length, while single "o" perforations are placed on the plain sleeve for the same purpose.

Satin cords may be used over the rows of shirring at the waist, but these look best on slender figures. A band of insertion, with edging to match, finishes the neck.

Winter Hats For The Kiddies

It isn't every little girl who has a father or mother with a Fortunatus purse, who can step into the smartest shop in town and order a bonnet or two to cover her golden curls. But a mother's clever fingers can do quite as much as the magic purse if the mother has good models to copy and the right bits of good material to work with.

One cap that may be made at home is much like a Russian Cossack's. It is developed from white velvet for the top and a wide band of white fur for the rest of the hat. A group of three white velvet gardenias with green satin leaves is the side trimming.

A little hat in Chinese effect showing a cord and tassel may be accomplished from beige velvet for the crown top and puffed section and dark blue for the close fitting band, which should be stiffened with buckram. Blue velvet ribbon is used for the crown top trimming, and dull gold tassels are attached at the ends.

In true poke effect is a fur trimmed bonnet of white corded silk. The fur is white, or beaver bands may be substituted. A raspberry colored flat rosette of velvet ribbon lies at the side of the buckram stiffened brim. A soft shade of raspberry georgette crape lines the poke brim.

The ever becoming tam-o'-shanter takes a slightly different tilt in a black velvet hat trimmed solely with two narrow bands of ermine. The band that fits around the head should be stiffened with buckram, while the top is left soft, though cut with a lopsided effect.

Another poke bonnet shows how a bit of brocaded velvet can be put to good use in a child's hat. It is made from old rose velvet with brocading of dull gold. The fur band is skunk. A piece of mother's evening coat would come in very handy just here.

Striped velvet in brown and white makes a fetching little hat when trimmed with two pompons of brown and white. The velvet is gathered under the pompons, as none of the kiddies' hats, like mother's, is covered smoothly this season.

For a very little tot a soft bonnet of white corded silk has a facing ruffle of valenciennes lace. Cords of the silk hold the fulness in place and form the rosette at one side.

An adorable little bonnet of black velvet shows a chin strap of velvet fastening at each side under tailored bows of ermine. The velvet is picoted on the edge and laid over a foundation bonnet of rows of val edging.

Taffeta and tassels are the main points about a green bonnet which is topped with a green velvet crown. The taffeta is folded about the crown, and two circular picoted ruffles of the taffeta fall softly from this. Green chenille tassels, four of them, dangle at front, back and sides.

A conservative model of white felt might be attempted by the home milliner. The crown is blocked rather high, and two circular brims are attached under a band of beaver fur. Ribbon velvet flowers in shades of rose, old blue, tan and mauve make an odd trimming. A large felt hat might be utilised by cutting off several inches, fitting this as a narrow brim.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE.

Satin brocade and chiffon in harmonizing shades of rose are used together in the development of this lovely evening gown. The foundation skirt is of the satin and over it is draped a chiffon tunic. In the bodice the order is reversed the underblouse being of chiffon and the overwaist of satin. There is a girdle of plain rose colored velvet, while rose and pearl beads outline the bodice and sleeves. In medium size the costume calls for 5 yards 36-inch silk and the same amount of 40-inch chiffon.

SNOW WORRIES FREIGHT MEN

Effect is to Impede Work of Transferring Goods—Railroad Rule is Opposed

New York—Shippers and railroad men were worried yesterday over the eect of the snow storm on the freight congestion in the railroad terminals of New York Harbor. Throughout the recent discussion of the situation many predicted a serious aggravation of conditions were heavy snow to come. Now that the snow is here, the question is one of degree. That the snow will make the congestion worse no one doubts, but whether it will be heavy enough or extensive enough in point of time and space to make the already difficult situation alarmingly worse no one could tell yesterday.

The chief effect immediately was that upon the harbor service. The snow and rain made loading and unloading much slower, and lighters frequently had difficulty in navigating and making landings. Every moment incidental to handling freight in the harbor required more time than on clear days, so less freight was removed from the congested terminals to the steamers.

Another feature of the freight congestion that has been widely discussed came up for further consideration by shippers yesterday after C. C. Mc Cain, Chairman of the Trunk Line Association, had given out an interview defending the ruling of the railroads reducing free storage time on export freight from thirty days to fifteen.

The Produce Exchange has already announced that it would protest to the Interstate Commerce Commission against this ruling, and a committee from the Traffic uBreau of the Merchants' Association has requested the railroads to reconsider their action. Thi committee will also protest to the commission, it is generally believed, if the railroads do not voluntarily withdraw their ruling, and the fact that Mr. McCain yesterday publicly sought to justify the railroads in their action was taken by some as indicating that the committee from the Merchants' Association would meet with a refusal. This committee has confered with a committee from ther railroads once, and is scheduled to hold another such joint meeting this wek.

MINSTREL SHOW MARKED FOR ITS SMOOTHNESS

a Voice is Calling," sung by Mr. Ranger was heartily applauded. Farrell, Van Buren's partner on the end, brought forth many laughs with his song and parodies, "Circus Day in Dixie." After "The Garden of the Gods" was sung by Wm. Hillick, Washburn and Pomphret made their entrance and from this time on to the close of the first act, the audience was kept in constant amusement.

A number of songs in connection with city municipal affairs were well composed and received hearty applause from the audience. Mr. Pomphret was exceptionally good, his style being of first class stage order. The act closed with a solo by Michael Bray entitled, "Anywhere in the U. S. A. is Home to Me." The entire chorus accompanied Mr. Bray and while each member of the cast waved a small Elk banner, Miss Genevieve McCormick attired in a costume of the nationalfl ag descended a stairway waving a large U. S. flag. This setting was greeted enthusiastically.

The second act opened with a violin selection by Bernard Jones, which was well received, and Claude E. Guile in black face followed. Mr. Guile's number consisted of riddles, jokes and parodies on local people. The Messrs. Newton, Adkins, Richardson, Guernsey and Crowe dispersed all the latest musical novelties, and their act was of first class order. William J. Richardson followed with a number of fancy bone solos. Mr. Richardson's nimble fingers, besides handling the bones tog ood advantage deftly manipulated knives, glasses, etc.

The closing act was a travesty termed "The Darktown Circus and Wild West" in which John W. Stevenson, M. J. Crandall, Horace W. Baggs, John Pomphret, Parker Van Buren, George Washburn, and Thomas Farrell took part. Messrs. Woodbury and Cornell in the role of the elephant "Boliver" were funny. Fred Guile, in the old cart act with John Stevenson was most funny. He was in professional make up as a female impersonator. George Washburn's makeup as the town constable was of a high order and he enacted the role in complimentary style. The caperings of the monkey were realistic. Mr. Hafter acted this part. In this act there was a giraffe, lion, monkey, animal trainer, the clown band, equestion director and Miss Sweet Evening Breeze from the West Side.

M. J. Crandall, who directed the play was good in his role of Equestrian Director.

Summed up, the show was a huge success and praise is forthcoming to Mr. Crandall, the members of the cast, and to Merton E. Reynolds who led the orchestra. It is expected that a net sum of $1,500.00 will be realized on the two performances and there is the possibility of the show being taken out of town for several performances. This will be decided at a meeting to be held soon.

After the show last night, 200 people sat down to a supper in the Elks rooms. All the Oswego visitors were present as was the entire cast in the show. Claude Guile and Thomas Farrell, together with the clown band, entertained the guests at the table. James Brooker also rendered a clarionet solo.

SWINDLES CHARGED IN WAR SUPPLIES

Paris—During the debate in the Chamber of Deputies today severe criticism wasm ade of relations between the war ministry and certain individuals who are selling supplies to the government. It was asserted the ministry had to deal with persons whose sole ocupation hitherto had consisted in frequenting pleasure resorts at night and therep icking up customers. These persons, it was said, were regarded as worthy to furnish shoes, clothing and cannon.

ROYAL MUMMY HEAD A HOODOO

Widow Blames It For Deaths of Husband and Son.

IS DONATED TO MUSEUM.

Declares She Believes That Mummy Skull of an Egyptian Queen Worked a Spell Over Her Family—Hopeful That She Can Break This by Giving Head Away.

Pittsburgh.—Because her husband and son have died since the acquisition of the mummy skull of an Egyptian queen nearly 3,500 years old Mrs. Jere Bauman of 466 Neshannock avenue, Newcastle, has donated the head to the Carnegie museum.

Mrs. Bauman says she believes that the mummy worked a spell upon the members of her family, and she is hopeful that she can break this by giving the head away. Her son died four years ago, and her husband died last month.

The skull is that of Queen Hatshepsutt, or Natasu, of the line of Thothmes. It was unearthed by Mr. Bauman in September, 1909, while he and his wife were traveling in Egypt. The head weighs about five pounds and is covered with a brown black cloth, which is glued tight to the flesh. Openings in the cloth show glistening eyes, and it is believed that they are polished agates. The ears and markings of the face show distinctly.

Queen Hatshepsutt, according to Mrs. Bauman, ruled about 1578 B. C. She followed the reign of Amasis, of the eighteenth dynasty, who overthrew the Hyksos, or shepherd kings. Amasis' son Amenophis, or Amenhotep I., became the patron saint of the Theban Necropolis, Thutmosis, or Thothmes I., next to rule, penetrated into Nubia beyond the Third cataract and also into Syria as far as the Euphrates.

Queen Hatshepsutt followed her father and ruled with her brother, Thothmes II., and independently. She is characterized in history as a most energetic ruler and one accustomed to have her way.

"Tradition tells us that moving a body from its native soil and tomb will bring ruin to the holder," said Mrs. Bauman. "I did not give this much thought. I did not like the head, but my husband seemed to place no belief in the superstition.

"The eyes seemed so penetrating. They were a kind of agate and sparkled dimly out of the folds of cloth. Four years ago my son died here while my husband and I were traveling in Germany. We came home at once. This may have been a warning.

"Recently my husband was taken ill. One night while sitting in his chair he called my name, and five minutes later he was dead.

"I am through with the head—in his notes of the Egyptian trip Mr. Bauman called the head a 'treasure'—and I will feel safer with it out of my home. It seems to have worked its evil spell here."

CLIFF DWELLINGS DECAY.

Professor Nels C. Nelson, Archaeologist, Pleads For Their Preservation.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Immediate action must be taken to preserve the cliff dwellings and other ancient ruins of the southwest, according to Professor Nels C. Nelson, a widely known archaeologist, who reached here after an 800 mile journey, during which he visited ruins lying between Mesa Verde, Colo., and Zuni, N. M.

The famous Chaco canyon ruins of New Mexico are in a lamentable state of deterioration, and steps should be taken at once to prevent further decay, Professor Nelson declared. He has conducted extensive excavations in various parts of New Mexico.

FISHING AND TOBACCO.

Pioneer Thinks They Helped Him In Reaching Green Old Age.

Grant, Mich.—Hinson Cole, a pioneer of Muskegon and Newaygo counties, who recently passed his one hundred and first milestone, thinks that his green old age is accounted for in part by the fact that for the last eighty years he has used tobacco moderately and always spent a goodly share of his time fishing.

Cole wanted to enlist for the civil war, but was turned down by Uncle Sam, as he was past forty-six years of age and too old for active duty. For eighty years Mr. Cole has enjoyed a local fame as the leading fisherman hereabouts.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

The building of a community depends entirely upon the citizens. If they are of the good kind, the city will be accordingly good; on the other hand, look over the map, pick out a dead town and visit there and you will find out that the fault is with the inhabitants.

The currents of activity which characterize the American urban centers of population and which are essential to their material and moral welfare now include as a fixed factor certain defined promotional efforts. These efforts while assuming various forms and extending into several directions have for their ultimate object the achievement of that efficiency, public and private which makes for better community life in all its essential features.

The agencies for such a result or condition, it may here be asserted, are already in existence and constantly at work; that individual initiative and enterprise, the established educational and moral forces, government and law, are all designed to achieve the ends to be attained. Granted that this be true, it still remains for some generic force to give cohesion to the several elements and invest the promotional possibilities of the whole with definite momentum and direction. The hope and aspirations of the community in this direction and the promotional effort arising out of them, cannot be entrusted on the public authority. Each now travels in its own orbit. The local government is restricted by law to certain functions. The single individual is absorbed in his individual pursuits with its inherent limitations. The uncovered field then lies between the function of the individual and the local government and permits that collective effort which transgresses neither the power of one nor the function of the other. Upon a new alignment it creates a force in which many individuals give a part of their time, a part of their thought, and a part of their effort and each throws into the scales his spare effort and his influence with those of the others. It is this collective influence, this combined thought and action which must be shaped into an efficient piece of machinery. Thus the recognition for concerted action along distinctive lines for the welfare of an entire community has found recognized form in the modern commercial organization.

A commercial organization constitutes the machinery through which certain results are to be achieved. Efficiency is exerted in the degree that it performs a service expeditiously and well. The quality of the product or kind of results to be obtained must determine the size, strength, and character of the machinery. Now the great question to be asked in Fulton is: "HOW IS OUR MACHINERY?" Is it up-to-date or way behind times; are the different parts oiled once in a while or are they worn out for lack of treatment.

Show the people around you that the machinery of Fulton is of the first and very best class, and that we are up-to-date in every way.

* * *

The Christmas Tree is going to be the biggest affair ever pulled off. Watch it being erected and watch the good spirit of Fulton's citizens.

The last three are on their way to Washington.

British Officials Hold Up Ford Peace Ship at Orkney Islands

London—The Oscar II, of the Scandinavian line, with the Ford peace party on board was reported yesterday from Kirkwall, in the Orkney Islands, as having entered that port. The American Embassy here later received information that the vessel had been taken into Kirkwall.

It is presumed at the Embassy that the Oscar II, was made to enter the port in order that itm ight be examined. This implies action by the British authorities which it had been expected would not be taken.

The oFreign Office last night had no news to publish on the subject other than the bare announcement of the steamship's arrival in the northern port. It is allowed to be inferred that no instructions were issued from London for the holding up of the Oscar II, Whatever action has been taken, therefore, would be on the initiative of locval authorities.

The vessel is said to have no cargo on board and the British government was understood to have no desire to bring the Ford party to British soil. It is not expected that she will be long restrained from continuing to her destination at Christiania.

New Balkan Phase is Seen; Arrival of Allies Near Salonica's Gates

London—Anxiety for the safety of the allied force in Greece has abated now that the British and French are across the Greek frrontier and within a short distance of their strongly fortified base at Salonica, where reinforcements are arriving daily.

But with this phase of the Balkan campaign over keen interest, which also carries with it much anxiety, is manifest in the next moves along the Greek frontier.

Although it seems certain the Bulgars will not invade Greece and no further fighting is expected for the present, the possible moves of the Austro-German forces in the peninsula are causing much concern. However, reports received in London last night from Salonica say the critical days for the Allies are over and that they will be able to hold on at Salonica until they are in a position to resume the offensive.

The position of the Allied army at Kukus, about twenty-three miles north of Salonica, is regarded in military circles as the advanced base selected for a duplication of the famous lines of Torres Vedras, which Wellington's army established in the Peninsula campaign. Between Kukus and Salonica the country is mountainous, with ranges rising in succession to the northward of the Greek port. These ranges can be passed only at certain points by an army, and the intersections of the different roads form so many strong positions. At Salonica, it is declared, the Allies have it in their power to cover a distance of fifteen milles inland with the fire of the fleet, and the ability to reinforce at will the force on shore. In no circumstances is it believed possible for the Teutonic invaders to dislodge the Allies from the Salonica position, while so long as the latter remain before that place their presence will demand a large force of Teutons, necessarily drawn from the western and eastern fronts. The allied fleet will be enabled by the very nature of things, it is declared, to play an active part in any operations undertaken by the Germans against Salonica, and this part must be a telling one.

When an Improvement Fund Fails to Better Employes' Condition

In these days of a depleted city treasury the life of a city employe is not the most desirable existence, for the reason that, in addition to the regular routine of troubles there hangs over the men in the various departments an awful gnawing uncertainty as to the time when the ghost shall walk.

Yesterday was the regular day for disbursing salaries, but no checks were forthcoming, nor is there the least likelihood that they will arrive in time for the employes of the city to encourage merchants to believe they want to shop early and often. The reason for this disheartening situation is a good one, there is no collateral stored up for salaries or any other purpose in the Improvement Fund. This fund, when it does exist, is the goose that lays the salary eggs. There is however, a way out of the dilemma, and only one way—the aldermen may arrange to borrow enough money to bolster up the emptied Improvement Fund, and then, some day, in so many words, take from one hand and place in another the needed sum.

Employes of the city are not the only persons who need the assistance of a leading angel, as W. Lawson Woodbury, Commissioner of Charities, has no city money available to apply upon the demands made by persons in need of charity. Mr. Woodbury is regretful of this condition of affairs, as there are on record a number of cases demanding financial assistance.

It should not be assumed by the reader that an unprecedented and unparalleled condition of financial stringency exists in the city treasury—not by any means, but in days gone by the situation was met by acting upon the City Attorney's advice, which in substance was: "Borrow in anticipation of next year's budget." This is not a new system, but it is effective in more ways than one; the most desirable feature being that those who need money may get it somewhere near the time it is due.

Shop early if you can.

Citizenship Brought Closer by Instruction in City's Night School

A. S. Solomon, United States Naturalization Examiner for New York State was in this city this morning for several hours receiving the applications of ten residents who want to become citizens.

The visit was unusual, in that has been customary to send applicants to Oswego for examination. The examiner's visit was occasioned by the exceptionally large number of applicants for papers.

Three natives of Italy, three Austrian Poles, one from Switzerland, one from Turkey, another from Scotland and one from Ireland, comprised the nationalities represented. The names of the men were Michael D. Kapenkas, Louis Francesconi, Ernest Fivaz, Peter Borek, John Szafranski, Thomas Darritt, Angelo Cincotta, Guiseppe Rossetti, Duncan MacDougall and Antoni Gadek, most of whom are employed in the woolen mills and the chocolate works.

"I was very much pleased with the intelligence shown by all of the applicants," Mr. Solomon said, "which I attribute largely to the fact that these men are taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the night school here. This is gratifying to the officials and we like to encourage them further in their studies."

Mr. Solomon left for Syracuse at noon. His headquarters are in New York city from which point he travels throughout the State.

Opinions

IT ALL DEPENDS

When it was proposed that our government buy the German ships tied up to American docks, Great Britain protested with great emphasis. Now that the available shipping of the world is inadequate to care for the commerce of the allies and our warehouses are choked with war materials and no ships to carry the goods to the allies, England believes that it would be a good thing under certain provisions for this country to take over the interned vessels and use them in the transportation of munitions of war. One London news paper goes so far as to state that the act would be valid in war time. It always was valid. but England viewed what was legal from the standpoint of her own interests. However, this country is not prepared to go into the transportation business on land or sea. It is valid for American business men to buy the German ships, just as it is lawful for them to buy German dyes. If there is any buying of ships it should be by private enterprise and not by the government.—Watertown Standard.

THRIFT IS ENCOURAGED

The banks all over the country are advertising Christmas funds for next year, the scheme having worked well both for depositors and banks the last year, allowing the depositors to approach Christmas without dread and making it truly merry, and supplying the banks with considerable funds without interest. There is a general movement, too, on the part of all banks everywhere to encourage habits of thrift by small savings. Perhaps they have a little mercenary object. but outside of that it is a good preachment. Those who have by small weekly payments collected considerable funds to make Christmas delightful instead of dolodous, have not only insured a Merry Christmas, but have been taught a lesson. Thrift brings happiness, thriftlessness brings misery. In the multiplication of savings institutions and this constant preachment for thrift, and in the results of those who have tried it, there is a constantly growing thrift among wageworkers and those of small incomes, and even those of larger incomes, generally procured by thrift, are working on the side of "safety first" against the ills and misfortunes of life. It is a good movement; it means a stronger and more independent people.—Watertown Times.

THE FARM DEMONSTRATION

In a report of farm bureau work in the State, the Dean of the State College of Agriculture says that at the present rate of attendance, here will be at least 2,000 demonstrations held in the 30 farmb ureau counties with an attendance of not less than 10,000 and perhaps 15,000.

There are some excellent things about a farm demonstration, for the man who follows a demonstration sees with his own eyes the proof that if something is done a certain result will follow. That is a great deal different from being merely told that if this is done that will result.

A demonstration is better than a large edition of pamphlets, especially if the pamphet is written by a pedantic scientist who makes his address to others like himself. The difference is almost as great as between reading how to do something and doing it. It is easier to see and understand than to read and understand, and the memory clings to the former much more tenaciously.

When fields of crops handled in a certain way measure up considerably larger, and more profitable than fields handled in the ordinary way, most reasonable men will accept the conclusions and some will adopt the better methods. That is why a demonstration is better than a phamphlet.—Utica Observer.

AS OF SOCIAL SERVICE

"If there is not much pulse there is not much life" a great man said in a little talk the other day before a noted gathering in the far West. He was talking of communities, and not of individuals, and the new spirit of social service abroad in the land was his theme. A few years ago, he pointed out, the great object was achievement. Today the great man has a new sense of social service; he has risen above the bread and butter horizon, and as a result the bread and butter part of their existence has taken care of itself. As an example he cited Henry Ford, and said:

"I sat one morning with Henry Ford listening to his talking reminiscences. Then he began to talk to me about his little car. He was not telling about his output, not about the millions, but rejoiced in the comfort that his little car gave, whizzing all over the highways of the world, the comfort that it brought to the little people. He did not boast of the product of his factory, but of the producers. He told me what good citizens they were. Now that man is a type. He did not make the new social sympathy, the new social sympathy made him."

People in small cities have the same opportunities to rise above a limited horizon. Instead of grabbing, if we live and let live, a bigger better and more prosperous life is the natural result. It is the logical outgrowth of a Principle.

REAL AMERICANISM

To emphasize its admirable sentiment, The Sun reprints from the newspapers of yesterday the subjoined passage from an address delivered on Saturday evening at a dinner held in this town:

"To me neither British nor German Americans nor Irish, Scotch, French, Italian or Russian Americans, as political entities, appeal.

"The notion of a small but clamorous section of Americans, who blazon forth their fancied claim to superiority over the rest of their countrymen by calling themselves the Anglo-Saxon race, is as absurd as it is unsound.

"An overwhelming majority of our white population is a mixture of all the white races of Europe—Teutonic, Latin and Slav.

"And where would you place the 10,000,000 colored people who live among us?

"Let us therefore abolish all distinction that may lead to ill feeling and let us call ourselves, before the whole world, Americans first, last and all the time."

The author of these sentences is a naturalized citizen of the United States. He was born seventy-two years ago and his Americanism is the growth of half a century spent in this country, in the course of which he has diligently improved his abundant opportunities to weigh the creditable and discreditable qualities of its complex population.

The sound and philosophic appeal for unity in citizenship was uttered by Rudolph Blankenburg, mayor of Philadelphia, who was born in Lippe-Detmold, Germany, educated in German schools, and who came to the United States in his twenty-second year, not to cherish a hyphen, but to contribute his best to the works of real Americanism.—N. Augustus Pitou, jr., is again directing the tour of Fiske O'Hara, the delightful Irish actor-singer, who is this season appearing in a new play by Augustus Pitou, sr., entitled "Kilkenny". Mr. O'Hara is a great favorite in this city and his annual visits are looked forward to with pleasurable anticipation. The new play is said to afford him splendid opportunities for thed isplay of his histrionic ability, and he will be heard in a budget of new songs especialy written for "Kilkenny."

MAINLY POLITICAL

Nebraska Republicans are a resourceful lot of politicians. Their primary laws permit wide freedom of action, and to this is due the petition to put Justice Hughes's name on the ballot. The Justice has promptly ordered his name withdrawn. But, nothing daunted, a group of Nebraska petitioners are now trying to put Mayor Thompson of Chicago on the ballot. In his home State, Mayor Thompson is believed to be for Senator Sherman, and it would be indeed curious if he should turn up in the convention as Nebraska's "favorite son."

The organized farmers of North Carolina, 40,000 strong, are reported to be lining up in support of Congressman Kitchin's attitude toward the President's defence plan. From other parts of the country come stories of agricultural opposition to the measure. It would not be strange if the embattled farmers of the land should be found to have the whip hand in the controversy. Yet preparedness seems sure to pass in some form or other. The farmers are said to feel keenly what they term the President's "desertion" of his real principles. A year ago the farmers were applauding Wilson for his peace sentiments. Now they are objurgating him for his militarism. It is indeed a curious situation, because Wilson as a peace President is to be the central picture in Democratic campaign literature and oratory next year.

Lack of "team work" is noticeable not only in President Wilson's own party but in the ranks of his former assistants, the Bull Moose. On the same day that Medill McCormick told the Colonel that there was no outlook for the third party, George W. Perkins gave out an interview of the most optimi t:c nature. There will be no question of putting anyone off the team because of this incident—for Mr. McCormick announces that he has quit the team of his own accord and that he will continue to act with the Republicans.

The Republican party will come back into power in 1916 not because political leaders want it to win but because the rank and file of the American people are convinced that Republican principles and administration are best for the industrial welfare and public service of the country. It will be a victory of the people and not a victory of the leaders.

Among the remarkable changes of opinion and position which have marked President Wilson's course none is more striking than that in relation to Tammany Hall. While Wilson had a huge majority in Congress and the opposition in the country was divided, Wilson had no use for Tammany. But now it is different. The Tammany Tiger is in a fair way to supplant the White House cat as a family pet.

LAY ONE KEE LEACH MONTH IS PLANNED

New York—To help build up the American merchant marine on the Atlantic seaboard, and to take advantage of the opportunities that will come for the American flag on the seas when the war is over—these, accorrding to Wallace Downey, shipbuilder, are the reasons for the founding of the Standard Shipbuilding Corporation, a $3,000,000 company just organized to do business on Staten Island. The new company has taken over the thirty-acre plant of the Townsend & Downey shipyards at Mariners' Harbor, and work will soon be begun to double its capacity. It is announced that co acts for the next several years have been underwritten and that a definite plan for shipbuilding has beend ecided upon.

SECURITY LEAGUE DRAFTS SUBJECTS

New York—To get into shape its programme for the national congress ginning January 21 the National Seginning aJnuary 21 the National Security League held an enthusiastic meeting in the Astor Hotel yesterday. Joseph H. Choate presided, and there were speeches by members who are experts in the questions that have to do with preparedness.

A preliminary draft of subjects to be considered at Washington was adopted and the chairman was directed to appoint a committee of fifty, whose work will be to see that all interests represented in the league have good delegations at the National capital in Januarp. The programme laid out for consideration is as follows:

World politics and American relation thereto.

The obligation of the individual to the nation, and methods of organization adopted by competitive nations for their own advancement.

These main questions will be divided into sub-topics and considered under such headings as the navy as the first line of defence, the army and its needs, the volunteer land forces and the coast defences. The subject of naval and military aeronautics will be taken up, as well as the utilization of national resources as applied to industrial preparedness, mobilization of industry, good roads and motor transportation. In addition these general subjects will have attention:—Labors part in preparedness, women's part, the effect on agriculture and the legal aspect especially as regards espionage.

A large number of representative men have alreradу accepted invitations to take part in the discussions. The details are in the hands of a committee including Charles Biddle, of Philadelphia; George T. Buckingham, Chicago; General Charles H. Cole, Boston; General George H. Harries, Omaha; Willet M. Spooner, Milwaukee; Charles B. Warren, Detroit; J. M. Wainwright, New York; Henry Woodhouse, New York, and S. Stanwood Menken, president of the league.

AUBURN GETS A MORRIS BANK

Chamber of Commerce There Back of Movement for the Common Welfare of the People.

And now Auburn people are planning to establish a Morris Bank for the welfare of everybody. Syracuse has men also who are working for the same kind of project, and the idea is not new or dead in this city, for some time ago The Evening Times made an announcement that a gentleman has plans laid for a local Morris Bank.

Tuesday's Auburn Citizen has the following to say regarding the Morris Bank plan.:

A movement to establish a savings and loan association in Auburn is under way. It is announced that Clay W. Holmes of Elmira, president of the New York State League of Savings and Loan Associations, is to confer here with a number of business men and bankers at the home of President French of the Chamber of Commerce.

Any movement that contributes to the common welfare deserves encouragement. It has been apparent for years that the community would benefit by many organizations which now exist elsewhere to the advantage of a certain class of citizens. A legal aid society would fill a long felt want, a free dispensary would afford medical service at nominal cost to many poor families; and a loan association based upon generous treatment of the borrower of small sums would be most desirable.

It would be an excellent thing if those who have this last matter under consideration take up the idea of extending the Morris Plan bank to this city. The Morris banks are not philanthropic institutions, at least primarily for they yield a return to their stockholders of about 8 per cent. They do not give away money, but they make loans based upon no other collateral than character.

Removes Loan Sharks

For the benefit of those who do not know about this form of bank we give a brief description of the plan. In 1910 Arthur J. Morris of Norfolk, Va., a young lawyer, saw the tremendous demand for a bank where a working man of good character temporarily in distress might borrow a small sum without becoming prey to the loan shark and without mortgaging his furniture. He organized a bank there and began to make loans by investigating only the borrower's character. Each applicant for a loan signed a note endorsed by two other persons of standing in the community. He was charged interest at 6 per cent. this sum being deducted from the loan and he paid back at the rate of $2 a week on a loan of $100. No other requirements were exacted. The bank was able to put the $6 interest to work in further loans and each $2 payment was likewise set to work. By use of good judgment defaults were not menacing but on the other hand the experiment of extending credit on character was so successful that the original bank has made over 7,000 loans aggregating $1,000,000 in this one community. Since then the movement has spread and today there are 31 Morris Plan banks in 22 cities making over 70,000 loans for an aggregate of $9,000,000. They return the banks about 8 per cent. One bank recently opened in New York city has made over a million in loans.

A loan institution of the Morris Plan fills a need in every commuity. The state laws and conservative management prevent the ordinary banks from undertakign small loans such as are involved in the transaction we mention. The question of collateral, moreover, prevents the larger banking institutions from engaging directly in this semi-philanthropic form of banking.

Wherever the Morris Plan banks have been put into operation the loan sharks have taken to the woods. A national organization of Morris Plan banks now exists with leading bankers endorsing and co-operating ni the work.

MILLIONS ARE IDLE EVEN IN NORMAL TIMES

In the January Woman's Home Companion Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson says:

"The magnitude of the normal unemployment cannot be ignored. If we include agricultural pursuits, there are about 3,000,000 people idle in the United States an average of two months; 2,000,000 idle an average of five months; and about 750,000 [illegible] an average of forty-two weks. Finding a job, therefore, becomes a problem of skill as much as holding a job once it has been found.

The paramount object of the new employment bureau has been to get machinery in operation by which the unemployed men and women of the country can be picked up in one place and put into another place where labor is needed. It is hoped that ultimately the industries can be so charted that it will be known just what the employing power of an industry is in the months of its maximum pay roll, and be able to know when, in any industry, the maximum and minimum will occur, and how the seasonal industries could to some extent be pitted against one another, the off season of one industry being the rush season of another, thus enabling one industry to take up the other's slack."

AWE OF DEATH IS ROUTED BY WAR

Twist of Nature Places Horrors In a New Light.

PITY IS NOT DRIVEN AWAY.

Unless Soldiers at Front Learn to Overlook Bloodshed and Death They Would Soon Lose Their Minds—A Joke Is the Only Antidote—Power of Appreciation Nullified.

"How can they stand it? I should think the soldiers living with death and the dead about them all the time would go insane."

One frequently hears that. The answer is easy. The men very quickly get used to it all, says a correspondent from the French front. Take this example:

As our party returned to the motors at sundown, after walking over the Champagne battlefield, two carts pushed quickly past us. On a canvas stretcher beneath the horseshoe axle of each lay a soldier, fully clothed.

"Wounded?" some one asked.

"Yes," said an officer, and changed the subject. But the soldiers pushing the carts were strangely careless with the wounded men. They walked rapidly and took no pains to keep the wheels out of the smaller shell holes. The forms rocked and pitched and swayed. The odd attitude of one of them fascinated me. He was on his back, his arms crossed before, but not touching his face, nor touching each other. With every lurch of the cart his arms waved about rigidly and stuck just where they were.

"Kidding" Each Other.

A second man accompanied each vehicle, and these two were "kidding" each other. The first threw a clod at the second, and the second replied by flinging his metal helmet at the first. There was a burst of laughter, and as the carts stopped to permit the pushers to mop their perspiring brows the two youngsters—they were about twenty—begin to chase each other round and round the stretchers.

Meantime we drew up to the little procession. The soldier still lay with his arms crossed as though warding off a blow. The soldiers on the stretchers, of course, were dead, killed the night before in the front trenches, and now under cover of the twilight haze, a mixture of purple vapors and cannon smoke, their four fellows were taking the bodies to one of the new Champagne cemeteries at the rear. Lifting the torn cap from the face of the soldier with the crossed arms, some one asked in a hushed voice:

"How did it happen?"

"Stray bullet," the cart pusher responded laconically. "Whew, it's pretty warm today!"

The stiff armed soldier's death had been instantaneous. He suffered as he had fallen, his arms before his face. He had been a very young man. A small mustache flaxen light was on his upper lip. The cap was replaced, and we went our way, leaving the living and dead to go theirs.

Were Not Pitiless.

Now, don't misunderstand. These four men escorting their dead comrades to the graveyard were not unfeeling nor pitiless in the ordinary sense. Taken from refined homes probably where the sight of pain hurt them deeply and from an environment where the presence of the dead was depressing and awesome, they were suddenly plunged into war and slaughter and agony and death until their senses were deadened. Their power of appreciation had been nullified. Dead men no longer awed them, blood no longer sickened them.

Nature, which makes men fight and mutilate and kill each other, had provided its own antidote; otherwise these men instead of "kidding" each other would have been gibbering idiots.

One man—his wife and little girl live in Paris—after serving through the battle of Champagne had to be sent to a special hospital. He was not wounded. His nerves had been shattered, his mental balance upset. His brain had not been able to readjust itself. Nature had let him go on weighing and appreciating all the horror about him.

The other condition is the only possible safeguard against insanity. It is the war god's own anaesthetic.

"PADDLE HIS OWN KANUE."

Father of Boy Who Wanted to Join Marine Corps Reassured by Officer.

Fearing that his runaway son would carry out an often expressed desire to enlist in the United States marine corps, Morris Kanue of Leopold, W. Va., has written to the Pittsburgh recruiting office of the "sea soldiers" as follows:

I hereby warn you not to employ or hire my son, Anthony Kanue, as a submarine of the navy. He has run away from home, and I think he has gone to Pittsburgh to enlist. He is only seventeen years old, in proof of which I am only thirty-nine myself. If he comes there, whale him within an inch of his life and send him back to me. His father,
MORRIS KANUE.

Sergeant Michael DeBoe, in charge of the Pittsburgh recruiting office of the United States marine corps, has assured the anxious parent that the boy will not be enlisted should he apply, but that "whaling" him is out of the question and the father should "paddle his own Kanue."

BEGGAR GETS $2,000,000.

Blind Man of Webb City, Mo., Then Wishes His Sight Restored.

Webb City, Mo.—To buy back his eyesight, to own a humble home, which he now rents and to start a bank in Webb City are the three first ambitions of the Rev. Z. R. Cotton, a blind street beggar here, who was told that he had inherited more than $2,000,000, of which $650,000 is cash, through the recent death of his only brother, Powell Cotton, at Richmond, Ark.

After being told of the fortune the blind man continued throughout the day soliciting alms at the postoffice door, but will leave shortly for Richmond and will stop at Tulsa, Okla., to consult a doctor who has assured him that for a stated sum, formerly fabulous to Cotton, his eyesight can be restored perfectly. Cotton has been blind since a sickness twenty-two years ago. He is sixty-three years old.

AMERICAN EXPORT TRADE PERMANENT

Must Continue to Supply France After War Ends.

TWO DECADES TO PAY DEBTS

Raw Materials and Cash Will Be In Continual Demand While Factories Are Being Rebuilt—Head of Steel Trade Foresees Enormous Task In Reconverting Various Plants.

That the volume of business between the United States and Europe will not cease with the war, that the United States for several years will not have to fear European competition in manufactured products, is the opinion expressed in Paris by Robert Pinot, general secretary of the Comite des Forges de France. This organization is the official representative of the Creusot works and all the other iron and steel manufacturers of France and the medium through which the French government is now getting large quantities of war munitions for the French and Russian armies.

"It is unfortunately true," Mr. Pinot said, "that we must look to the United States for several years to supply us with money or credits and with raw and manufactured materials. We will be working for the next twenty years to pay what we owe. Not before that time can we begin to put any profits in our own pockets. The fear that so soon as the war is ended the manufacturers now busy making arms and cannon and shells will convert their factories into the making of products to compete with yours is ungrounded.

Must Rebuild Old Plants.

"We will have the enormous task of rebuilding our old steel plants, of reconverting our automobile, button, cloth, printing and railroad shops, all now busy making munitions, back to their old uses. We will have to try to repair the vast material destruction that has come with the war. Then we will have to do our best to satisfy our own home markets. To do these things we will have to continue to buy of you, as we are now doing for war supplies.

"So far as concerns France, we iron and steel men had begun to do a surprising business in the few years before the war. We were not only filling the demands on the home market, but we were beginning to go into the foreign trade. France had almost ceased to be an agricultural nation. I believe, too, that our products were the most perfectly made in the world. Our customers demanded long wearing articles, and we satisfied their demands. An American locomotive is built to last seven years, whereas the railroads we supply want them to last thirty years. This is a condition the American must meet in future competition with us."

In connection with the reconstruction of the French factories destroyed in the north of France, referred to by Mr. Pinot, a current report indicates increasing imports of cotton from the United States and shows that France is now using more American cotton than ever before the war. The totals for the first eight months of this year of such imports were 6,000,000 metric quintals of 100 kilos each. Before the war France had 7,200,000 cotton spindles and 120,000 looms. At the end of 1914 but 25 per cent, or 1,800,000, were in operation, due to the German invasion of the Vosges and Lille districts. Now 40 per cent, or 3,000,000 spindles are in operation, with 4,200,000 still idle.

MARINES MAY CARRY STICKS.

Idea Borrowed From Tommy Atkins Is Sanctioned by Major General.

Major General Commandant George Barnett of the United States marine corps has sanctioned the carrying of swagger sticks by marines when ashore in uniform or out of garrison. The idea is borrowed from Cousin Tommy Atkins of the British army. It is thought that the carrying of the sticks will add distinction to the marines' already attractive uniform. The sticks are from various kinds of wood and are usually twenty-four or twenty-six inches long. Chinese bullets are sometimes used for ferrules and foreign coins for the heads.

The marine is a much traveled man and is quick to pick up ideas of foreign services which will add in any way to his already natty military appearance.

SAFE AFTER 10,000 FOOT LEAP

Parachute Lands Man Without Injury; In Air Fifteen Minutes.

Colonel Maitland of the British royal naval air service jumped with a parachute from an aeroplane which was 10,000 feet in the air. He landed safely. The officer has been experimenting with projected developments of the aerial service and arrived at the point where it was necessary to determine whether an air man could land safely by parachute from such a height.

"Some one has to do it," he said. "There is only one person I care to ask. I will make the attempt myself."

It took the colonel fifteen minutes to make the descent, but he solved his problem satisfactorily.

WHALE BATTLES WITH SHIP.

Monster Nearly Founders Whaling Vessel.

Seattle, Wash.—Showing the effects of a desperate battle with a huge sperm whale while ten miles south of Mount Edgecumbe, Kruzof island, near the entrance of Sitka sound, the whaling steamer Star III., Captain L. P. Halls, Gunher G. Earling, reached Eagle Harbor after a successful season.

While taking one of the big mammals, which members of the crew described as "just like an ocean liner," the big fellow charged the steamer, damaging the gunwale, second towing chock on the starboard side and bending and crumpling a plate in the bulwarks for a distance of ten feet. The weight of the whale nearly swamped the little steamer.

Pascal's Early Observation.

Blaise Pascal, who wrote a remarkable treatise on the laws of sound, was constantly observing the familiar occurrences about him even as a boy. When he was only ten years old he sat at the dinner table one day striking his plate with his knife and then listening to the sound.

"What are you doing with that plate, Blaise?" asked his sister.

"See," he replied. "When I strike the plate with my knife it rings. Hark!"

Again he called forth the sound.

"When I grasp it with my hand so," he continued, "the sound ceases. I wonder why it is."

MAX FIGMAN
as "Blackie Daw"

MAX FIGMAN DOESN'T LIKE SKUNK FARMS—ONE EXPERIENCE PROVES A LIFE LESSON.

Say "Skunk Farm" to Max Figman and his usual good nature wears thin in certain places. By judicious questioning you find that there are certain very good reasons for this. Mr. Figman is playing "Blackie Daw" in Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford," a series based upon George Randolph Chester's well known stories. The pictures are being made at the Wharton Studios in Ithaca, N. Y., and one of them deals with high finance as applied to skunk farms.

To get the requisite local color it was necessary to take the company to Connecticut, where are located several examples of this infant and smelly industry. At first sight the company was enamored with the pretty black and white animals which look as innocent as so many kittens. The scenes were taken and the players were ready to depart. Mr. Figman leaned up against the wire netting of one of the enclosures to have a little chat with the skunk farmer. Somehow or other one of the skunks got peeved—result, a chorus of cuss words and a strict quarantine against the badly abused Mr. Figman. As a passenger on the train, our genial friend was impossible. It is rumored that he made his way back to Ithaca on foot via the Poughkeepsie Bridge.

RESEARCH CENTER IS URGED FOR ENGINEERS

Would Have Laboratories Like Those of Germany.

New York.—Research laboratories the equal of those of Germany are under consideration by Columbia university, according to the report of Dean Frederick A. Goetze of the Graduate Engineering school.

After outlining the successful research work accomplished by Dr. Walter Rittman and Professors Armstrong and Pupin in the field of wireless telephony and telegraphy Dean Goetze's report says:

"There is no doubt that much could and should be done to extend our engineering research and to make it of even greater value to the university and to the industries of our country.

"Many of us are firmly convinced that this can best be accomplished by establishing on a site of ample area easily accessible to the university, but among neighbors who will not be too particular as to the smells and noises which we will create, laboratories adequately equipped for all branches of industrial engineering research and administered by the heads of our engineering departments, to which manufacturers and practicing engineers could turn for the solution of problems which are beyond the scope of their equipment or the capabilities of their force.

"In my mind these laboratories should be patterned after those of the German Reichsanstalt, connected with the Technische Hochschule at Charlottenburg, and located in the outskirts of Berlin.

"If Columbia were to establish laboratories of this kind, equipped with every facility for experimentation and research, with the staff of our technical schools available for consultation and advice, manufacturers and individual experts would be glad to avail themselves of these facilities and to establish research fellowships for solving their industrial and engineering problems.

"The cost will depend largely upon the site, which should be close to the water and railroad facilities. We would need at least $500,000 for a start and for extension and endowment later on from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 will be needed."

CLERGYMEN JOIN TO MAINTAIN DIGNITY

New York—One hundred and thirty Episcopal clergymen organized yesterday to do all in their power to "maintain the dignity of the Episcopal Church" through a propaganda of preaching, lecturing and writing to counteract the influence of the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church in participating with the denominational Pretestant churches in the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, to be held at Panama next February.

The action was taken at a meeting of the Catholic Club, a luncheon at the City Club, No. 55 West Forty-fourth street, to two bishops and sixty clergymen who are not members but were invited to discuss with the club what steps could be taken in the controversy, which has continued since the Board of Missions elected seven delegates to the Panama Congress. The Catholic Club is an organization of clergymen of the ritualtistic party in the Episcopal church

One of those specially invited to speak was the Right Rev. G. Mott Williams, Bishop of Marquette, Mich. who was one of the three bishops who recently resigned from the Board of Missions because of the Panama issue.

Bishop Williams said that the Right Rev. Charles B. Colmore, Bishop of Puerto Rico, was the last to announce he would not go to Panama. He said he had received word to the same effect from Bishop Henry J. Aves, of Mexico. He said it was now well known that the Right Rev. Albion W. Knight, Episcopal Bishop of Panama, not only has refused to be a delegate but had put it on record that he would have nothing to do with the conference. Such action leaves only four to go to Panama of the seven bishops named.

MARKET ROADS ARE FAVORED

Supervisors May Set Aside $30,000 for Their Construction Next Year. Progress in 1915.

Oswego—Highway matters occupied the attention of the board of supervisors at the nineteenth day's session yesterday.

A resolution offered by Mr. Nichols for the appropriation of $30,000 as the county's share in the first year's outlay for market roads under the county road system, recently adopted, was presented and laid over until today.

The resolution provides that the work shall be done under the supervision of the superintendent of highways of highways committee of the board of supervisors. These authorities shall also designate the roads to be improved. The superintendent shall also supervise theg rading and culvert work in preparing such roads. The county treasurer is authorized to issue bonds, if necessary to pay the county's share of the improvement. It is not contemplated that an issue of bonds be made.

The annual report of County Superintendent of Highways E. A. Howard was presented by Mr. Nichols and was ordered filed and printed.

This report shows that big strides were made in road improvement in this county in the past year. At the present time 900 miles of the 1714 miles of highways in this county have had some degree of permanent improvement. This includes 150 miles of highway built wholly or in part by the State of New York. The report shows that 603 miles have been surfaced, either with stone or gravel.

During the past season 155 permanent culverts have been built, making a total of 1339 in the entire county. There were 33 permanent bridges having a span of more than 5 feet built this year. the total being 156 bridges in the county having a span of from 5 to 600 feet.

Mr. Howard calls attention to the necessity of the towns obtaining the necessity of the towns obtaining the maximum of State aid for road work. This can be done, he states by slightly increasing the highway appropriations.

The total State aid to be paid to the towns in 1916 will be $39,458.77, and that them axiumum that could be received is $42,840, the amount by towns and the percentage of State aid received being as follows;

Mr. Howard's report shows that the total amount received for highway improvement by the towns during the past season was $143,051.71, of which $119,742.10 was expended leaving a balance of $23,309.61.

The highway improvement fund of the towns called the T. B. M. fund was [illegible] and the expenditures, $86 372.46, leaving a balance of $411,-236.82.

The special order on the resolution by Mr. Riley for a contract for sending disorderly persons, charged with failing to support their families. to the Onondaga penitentiary, was continued for another week on motion of Mr. Vincent, who explained that there was an important legal question involved that required inquiry by the county attorney.

Mr. Gallagher said after the meeting that on its face the law would require in case a contract is made that all persons sentenced for more than sixty days, from thise ounty, would have to be sent to Jamesville. Mr. Gallagher will inquire further into the question before giving his decision to the board.

COMMITTEE FINDS INCOME TAX FAVORED

New York—There is little doubt that income tax legislation will be advocated in the report of the Mills Legislative Committee. This committee is trying to find new means of raising revenue for the State.

The committee has returned to this city after conducting several hearings upstate. At the conclusion of yesterday's session, Senator Ogden L. Mills, the chairman said:

"The evidence obtained at Rochester, Syracuse and Buffalo is in line with the evidence given at our previous hearings in this city. It is overwhelmingly in favor of an income tax, as the best means or raising revenue."

Professor T. S. Adams, of Cornell University, was one of the witnesses yesterday. He was for five years tax commissioner of the State of Wisconsin.

"The tax on personal property is barbarous," he asserted. "The income tax is far from perfect, but it is by far the best tax I know of. It compels the rich to make substantial contributions.

"As far as business is concerned it does not penalize the unsuccessful concern, or the mail concern. Its effect upon the small householder will be to reduce his burdens.

"The income tax has so intrenched itself in Wisconsin that it is a political help and not a burden. The governor made the passage of the bill a personal issue, and he was re-elected."

Members of the Merchants Association will appear before the committee today.

NEW YORK CITY DECLARED INSOLVENT

New York—"New York city is insolvent because it cannot pay its obligations as they become due in the ordinary course of business," was one of the statements made last night in Terrace Garden at the dinner directed by the United Real Estate Owners' Association. Stewart Browne, president of the association, declared that if the two hundred and sixty thousand realty owners of New York city would exhibit any part of the courage and coherence shown by the supporters of suffrage for women their troubles would be amended in no time.

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

PREPAREDNESS IN BUSINESS URGED

National Co-operation Campaign Is Now On.

NEED GREATER UNIFORMITY

Colonel Pope, President of the National Association of Manufacturers, Declares Attacks and Hostility Toward Industrial and Business System Retard Development and Growth.

New York.—Presidents of five of the most influential manufacturers' associations in the country, representing industries capitalized approximately at $14,000,000,000 and giving employment to about 6,000,000 workmen, were sponsors at a recent baptism in this city of the national business co-operation campaign.

These captains of industry gathered to discuss the nation's business, present and future, and chiefly to safeguard present industrial conditions which may be threatened when the war ends.

From the same platform in less than three hours the manufacturing industries of the country were dissected and put together again by William H. Barr, president of the National Founders' association; H. H. Rice, president of the National Metal Trades association; Colonel George Pope, president of the National Association of Manufacturers; John P. Wood, president of the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers, and Albert G. Duncan, president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers.

COLONEL GEORGE POPE.

The prosperity the country is enjoying from big crops and the boom in war orders were gone over thoroughly. Both capital and labor were urged to work in the common interest of the nation's welfare.

"Shortly after the war," Barr said, "by the time the foreign governments can reconstruct their manufacturing industries, the United States will face the greatest competitive struggle in its history.

"We should husband our resources; the people generally should be more thrifty and more economical; we should improve our machinery appliances in our plants.

"Further than that," he continued, "from a purely manufacturing viewpoint, we might assume that the foreign countries may during the early reconstruction period follow their mobilization plan in industry, as they have in arms, which from a production standpoint would mean the lowest possible cost."

Colonel Pope talked earnestly to the manufacturers on "industrial preparedness." He said American industry needs greater uniformity and standardization.

Colonel Pope said American industry requires preparedness in its sphere exactly as in their spheres the army and navy require preparedness. The method and means are different, he asserted, but the underlying principles are the same.

Colonel Pope said that from many quarters there constantly arise misguided, unfair attack and hostility toward industrial and business systems that retard development and growth seriously, and they should be guarded against.

Referring to the attacks made on business through politics, Pope said:

"Politics should mean a fair and frank discussion as to the best ways by which our commonwealth may be advanced and the welfare of our citizens promoted. Would that this were true! Politics, however, often degenerates into a systematic method of attack, arraignment, indictment, charge and accusation.

"Almost there exists at times a war zone in the field of American business. Industry is thus put on the defensive, and this situation cannot continue without disastrous results to those who are sincerely interested in our national industrial progress and who are at heart as patriotic as any group of men in the world."

TO PAY $43,490,000 IN TAXES

Assessment of the Reichsbank Under Terms of New Law.

The computation is made by the Overseas News agency of Berlin that the assessment for 1915 on the Reichsbank under the new law taxing war profits will amount to 193,960,000 marks ($48,490,000). Under the terms of the law the tax will not be collected during the war.

The law applies to the Reichsbank as follows: It must pay 100,000,000 marks saved in 1915 by the abolition of the former tax on circulating notes. It must pay 14,300,000 marks on extra profits in 1914 and 33,600,000 marks on war profits in 1915. The regular taxes, amounting to 46,000,000 marks, bring the total to 193,960,000 marks.

THE BOYS' CHRISTMAS.

Several "Things" That Please the Small Men of the Family.

Leaving out any question of the beneficial effect upon boys of certain Christmas gifts, there is a long list, any one of which will give pleasure pure and simple, without any moral reflections. A good flag of United States standard make, with pole and fitting for a window casing, delights a boy and adds to his patriotism.

Of course a "wheel" is a most acceptable gift, or if he has one some additions to his outfit, a lantern, bell, cyclometer or rack, or a sweater, which, if he does not own, he wants.

In the same connection a football, "regulation" bat and ball, tennis racket, set of dumbbells, all suggest themselves to suit the tastes for different out of door sports.

A bag of marbles, the bag made of duck or coarse linen and his initial embroidered on it, will find a welcome, particularly if it holds "reals."

Most of the fathers of the boys of today never dreamed of having a watch until they were of age, many of them not until they earned one; but pretty watches that are also good timepieces are so cheap and plentiful nowadays that boys of eight and nine aspire to them. Any boy who has a wornout watch or none at all will be pleased with one at Christmas. A good chain, strong if not expensive, should go with it. Studs, sleeve buttons and scarfpins please boys, and an addition to their stock of neckwear is never objectionable.

Guns and rifles—the mere mention of them makes a boy's eyes snap. Only the coolest and most sensible, however, should be trusted with them. It is almost better, indeed, when thinking of buying one for any lad under twenty, to follow Punch's matrimonial advice, "Don't." But how a boy loves them! He will fondle a gun as a girl does her doll, patting it gently and passing his hands over stock, trigger and muzzle, while his eyes shine with longing or, if he owns it, with actual affection.

Don'ts For Parents.

Here are some very important dont's for parents: Don't forget that children, like plants, suffer seriously from want of sunlight. Don't forget that children are more seriously affected by impure air than grown people. Don't forget that little children are easily depressed by gloomy surroundings, and this lowers their vitality. Don't forget that lowered vitality makes children more liable to catch any infectious disease.

Don't think that any room in the house will do for the nursery. The sunniest, most airy and most cheerful room in the house should be given to the children if you want them to be healthy. Don't shake or scold a child who wakes up and cries out in the night. Often night terrors are a purely nervous affection, and any harshness only makes matters worse. Don't say "don't" to your little ones. Remember to tell the child what he is to do, not what he is not to do.

It often happens that little children especially those nervous or highly strung, are disposed to keep on crying when they get started. When you wish a child to stop sobbing get him to take a good drink of cold water. It almost always will stop the sobbing immediately.

Christmases In Various Lands

DEVONSHIRE, England, noted for its apples, boasts a curious custom. On Christmas eve the farmer and his son stand beneath the oldest and best apple tree, both bearing a jug of cider, and sing a certain folk song.

After passing the cider jug around they betake themselves home to a good supper and much merrymaking.

The Jamaica negroes collect all bits of odds and ends of finery with which to array themselves on Christmas eve and, choosing a king and queen, follow these leaders about, making as much noise as possible.

The custom of giving gifts at Christmas came not from the presents of gold and silver given to the Christ Child, as many believe, but from an old custom of priests putting on board of all outgoing ships a box of alms.

The box was opened at Christmastide and masses said for the givers of the alms

His Indifference.

"This is fine growing weather!" triumphantly stated honest Farmer Jolly.

"What is that to me?" snarled J. Fuller Gloom, the vile and venomous pessimist. "I've got my growth."—Judge.

A Christmas Box

By EUNICE BLAKE

Jack Hollingsworth was to have been his uncle's heir until Jack married Julia Trevor without saying anything about it to the old man except to invite him to the wedding. After that it was understood that St. Luke's hospital would get the bulk of the property and Jack would have to get on as best he could. Since he had been brought up to expect a fortune, this was not a pleasant outlook.

A couple of months before the third Christmas after the marriage and a short time after their baby was born Jack and his wife were sitting together brooding over their poverty—for Jack was not a success as a worker—and lamenting that Jack had not at least mentioned the fact to his uncle that he was about to take a wife and asked the old man's approval. Mrs. Hollingsworth said she didn't blame the old man a bit. Jack admitted that he didn't blame him either.

"Let's send him a Christmas present," said Julia. "It may bring about a change."

"Where are we to get the money to pay for it?" suggested her husband.

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll make a batch of those iced top cookies I know so well how to make and send them to him in a box with a note saying I made them."

"Put in your photograph," said Jack.

This plan was not so bad, since Mr. Silas Henderson, Jack's uncle, believed in women who were practical and was very fond of children. Indeed, it was the sad spot in his life that his wife, now dead, had not borne him a son to bring up to manage his business and inherit his property.

Unfortunately for Julia's scheme, not long before Christmas Silas Henderson received a Black Hand letter demanding $5,000. He paid no attention to the demand except to hand it over to the police. On Christmas eve Jack, at Julia's suggestion, to save expressage, as soon as it was dark took the box of cookies to his uncle's house, put it down, rang the bell and slipped away. The summons was answered by the butler, who took up the box and carried it to his master, telling him how he had found it.

Mr. Henderson took it up, looked at the address—written by Julia—and, suddenly remembering his Black Hand letter, dropped it like a hot coal.

"Thomas, telephone for the police!" he cried to the butler.

The order was obeyed, and in a few minutes a patrol wagon dashed up to the house. A sergeant and a couple of men entered and asked what was the matter. The sergeant when informed of the receipt of a suspicious package sent the men back to the station and proceeded to examine what no one doubted was an infernal machine.

The first thing the sergeant did was to unloose the bit of narrow ribbon that Julia had used in tying it up and put it in his pocket as a possible clew. The next thing was to unwrap the paper about the box and hold it up to the light in hopes of seeing some mark on it by which to find the culprit. A box in which a set of child's ninepins had been kept next appeared.

"A sliding cover," remarked the sergeant sententiously. "We must find some way to remove the lid without drawing it out, for this is doubtless intended to produce friction and light an inflammable. Have you anything to bore with?"

A large sized gimlet was produced, and the sergeant bored a hole in the side of the box, drew out the gimlet and looked at a substance that adhered to it.

"Dynamite!" said the sergeant.

He put the gimlet to his nose, then to his tongue.

"Doesn't taste like dynamite. It's more like cake. I fancy, Mr. Henderson, you have made a mistake. This may be a Christmas box."

He bravely pulled out the cover, removed some paper and took up a card on which was written:

A merry Christmas to Uncle Silas from the Hollingsworth family.

Beneath the card was a photograph of what looked to Mr. Henderson like a Madonna and child. Lifting another paper, a dozen round cakes with pink icing on the top were displayed. Mr. Henderson gave one to the sergeant and ate one himself. It was delicious.

"Thomas," said the receiver of the box, "call up my nephew, John Hollingsworth, on the phone and ask him if he and his family will dine with me tomorrow."

Thomas obeyed the order, and the next day the Hollingsworth family, including Silas Henderson Hollingsworth, aged two years, the child sitting in a high chair on his great-uncle's right, dined with Silas Henderson.

That was the first Christmas in many years that Silas Henderson had any one to dine with him on Christmas day. A fine dinner was provided, such as the Hollingsworths had not partaken of since their marriage. Mrs. Hollingsworth made herself especially agreeable, and little Billy was regarded by his great-uncle with delight.

"After all," said the old man, "blood is thicker than water. You, Jack, and you, Julia, and Billy will make my life much happier in the future, and it all came from a mess of cookies."

The next day Mr. Henderson changed his will in favor of his grandnephew, leaving the estate in trust to the boy's father.

For the Children

Little Girl Awakening on Christmas Morning.

What a happy awakening for the little girl in bed on Christmas morning! She perhaps had sent a letter to Santa Claus to tell him her needs and desires, or maybe her mamma by skillful questioning had discovered what her daughter hoped the good saint would give her. And so the most wonderful thing has happened, for Santa Claus has brought the very presents the little girl longed for. Isn't it queer how closely Santa Claus guesses what little folks want? He seems to select the very things they like best. Surely he is a wonderfully gifted and kind hearted old gentleman. He rarely forgets his little friends.

Mysterious Chimney Swift.

Much has been learned about bird migration, but much yet remains to be learned, and the following is one of the most curious and interesting of the unsolved problems: The chimney swift is one of the most abundant and best known birds of the eastern United States. With troops of fledglings, catching their prey as they go and lodging by night in tall chimneys, the flocks drift slowly south, joining with other bands, until on the northern coast of the gulf of Mexico they become an innumerable host. Then they disappear. Did they drop into the water or hibernate in the mud, as was believed of old, their obliteration could not be more complete. In the last week in March a joyful twittering far overhead announces their return to the gulf coast, but their hiding place during the intervening five months is still the swift's secret.

Christmas Cheer.

Oh, children, you who have a Christmas, why won't you make it have a real meaning by impersonating Santa Claus? And if you cannot get through the chimney for the reason "that there ain't none" then joyously walk through the door of the poor dwelling and deposit your gift on the threshold. You do not catch the true Christmas spirit if you give only when you expect to receive in return. After you have exchanged gifts within your homes and even to your relatives near by then show your "good will to men" by making the "merry Christmas chimes" ring in the hearts of some poor tots.

Peanut Hunt—A Christmas Game.

Get about twelve packages of peanuts of different sizes. They should be hidden in vases, corners and nooks. Each child is provided with a little canvas bag and is told of the hidden peanuts. These are hunted for, and when all the children have returned with their treasure it is eaten.

How Water Melts Stone.

There are two things in rain besides the water itself that have the power to melt things, even the hardest stone, such as granite. These two things are nitric acid and carbonic acid. These acids eat away the stone so that it seems the water slowly melts it.

For Wakeful Dolls.

Some folks think that rocking spoils dolls. I don't. Do you? They sleep much better if you rock them, and if that won't put them to sleep you might tell them the story of the "Three Bears" or "Little Red Riding Hood."

Dollie's Golden Crown.

Here's my dearest dollie, dear,
When you get safely down,
Please bring to her, dear Santa Claus,
A bright new golden crown.

Don't wake her up, dear Santa, please,
She's sleeping in her booth;
Be very careful as you put
The crown on dollie's tooth.

She's eat so much candy, poor dear,
It's worn her tooth away,
And every day it aches so bad,
She'll neither eat nor play.

I tied her little handkerchief
Around the aching jaw:
She looks so very bad, poor dear,
The worst you ever saw.

I think it is a shame, I do,
To tell the solemn truth,

Once Upon a Time.

My little child comes to my knee
And, tugging, pleads that he may climb
Into my lap to hear me tell
The Christmas tale beloved so well—
A tale my mother told me,
Beginning "Once upon a time."

It is a tale of skies that ring
With angel rhapsodies sublime;
Of that great host, serene and white,
The shepherds saw one wintry night—
And of the glorious stars that sang
An anthem once upon a time.

This story of the hallowed years
Tells of the sacrifice sublime
Of one who prayed alone and wept
While his wearied followers slept—
And how his blood and Mary's tears
Commingled, once upon a time

And now my darling at my side
And echoes of the distant chime
Bring that sweet story back to me,
Of Bethlehem and Calvary,
And of the gentle Christ who died
For sinners once upon a time.

The mighty deeds that men have told
In ponderous tomes of fluent rime
Like misty shadows fade away,
But this sweet story bides for aye—
And, like the stars that sang of old,
We sing of "Once upon a time."
—Eugene Field.

"Not Until Next Christmas."

It was said the other day by an old southerner in Washington that no home loving Virginian ever would move "until after the next Christmas." The next Christmas comes and goes, but there is still another to come, and the moving is put off and, happily, will be put off until holiday spirit has gone from the south, a spirit that will go when the south goes.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES.

Historical Sketch to Be Given March, 1916, During Jubilee Month.

Fifty years ago the first Young Women's Christian association in this country was founded in Boston, March 3, 1866. On March 3, 1916, the fiftieth birthday of Y. W. C. A. work in America will be observed with a service of rejoicing in 968 associations. During this period the work has grown from one small association to an organization numbering 342,948 members in America, owning millions of dollars' worth of property in buildings to which members come for recreation, to make friends and to study subjects ranging from those on the curriculum of grammar grades to the university. Some one has called the educational department of the Y. W. C. A. the "greatest woman's university."

From Feb. 1 to March 3, 1916, the jubilation will continue, participated in by members and those interested in the work the country over. One of the important dates is Feb. 22, to be celebrated by a historical pageant of association work, "Girls of Yesterday and Today," which has been specially prepared by all the associations in the United States. It will be a pictorial presentation, with only two speaking parts. The girl of 1866, gowned in the dress of that period, and the girl of 1916, in up to the minute attire, will interpret the scenes.

Employment agencies have always been an important part of association work. Business positions and domestic situations have always been included. Domestic science was always on the curriculum whenever teachers could be found. Almost without exception the early associations opened boarding homes for young women, chiefly for self supporting girls. In 1872 Hartford, Conn., erected the first building for this purpose. The first association summer home was built at Asbury Park by the Philadelphia association in 1874. In 1891 Kansas City, Mo., opened the first self serving lunchroom.

In 1886 a convention was held at Lake Geneva and the National Young Women's Christian association, which later became the American committee, with headquarters in Chicago, was formed. In 1891 it was decided to form a permanent executive body, and the International Board of Women's and Young Women's Christian Associations was effected. In 1892 American delegates were invited to London, where Young Women's Christian association work was started. The world's organization was accomplished in 1895. In 1905 members from both the American boards merged the two organizations into one national body, with headquarters in New York city.

Dark Waists Are Popular.

The separate blouse is of simple character and is otherwise in line with the general style tendencies. The newest note is the introduction of dark waists, to match the tailored suit in color. These more dressy waists are made of chiffon, georgette crape, taffeta, satin, marquisette and crepe de chine. For the simple tailored waists for practical wear crepe de chine, in white or flesh color, is favored. Lace waists, black or white, are modish.

A limited quantity of the more elaborate numbers have the girdle finish, to be worn outside the skirt.

The Great Eastern.

The dimensions of the one time world famous Great Eastern were as follows: Length, 692 feet; width, 83 feet; depth, 60 feet; tonnage, 24,000 tons; draft when unloaded, 20 feet; when loaded, 30 feet. She had paddle wheels fifty-six feet in diameter and was also provided with a four bladed screw propeller of twenty-four feet diameter. She had accommodations for 800 first class, 2,000 second class and 1,200 third class [illegible]

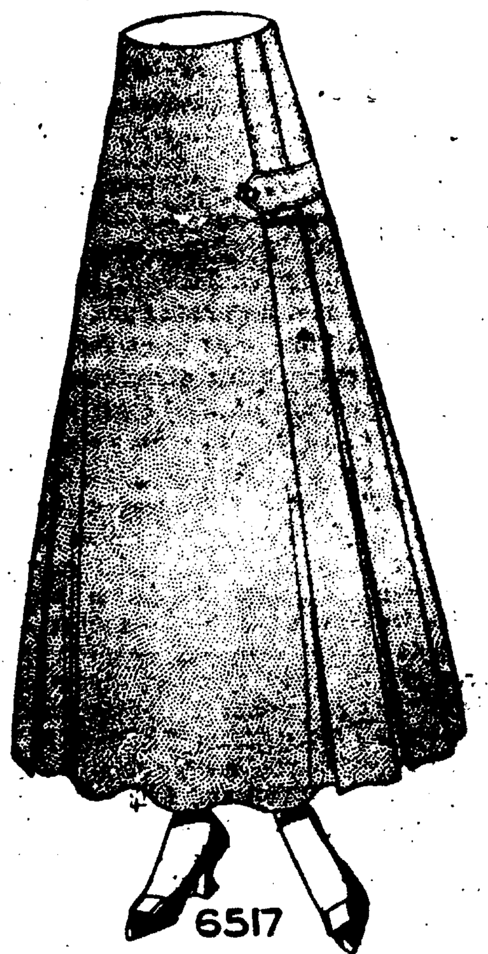
Short, Pleated Skirts Hold Sway.



The short, full pleated skirt is one of fashion's principal fads. This design is cut in four gores, the pleated sides accentuating the splendid lines of the straight front and back.

Fashionable dressmakers differ over many details of dress, but they seem agreed on the question of skirts. There are two general rules for the amateur to follow in which event she will not make a mistake, have the skirt full and make it short. Embodying these fashionable essentials the skirt shown here is one of the latest applicants for popular favor. It is a four-piece model with box-plaited side gores. The closing is at the left side front, with the width about the lower edge is between 2½ and 3 yards. In medium size the skirt requires 3⅞ yards 36-inch material.

The home dressmaker should study the cutting guide carefully before attempting to cut out the skirt. Fold the material evenly, then place the various sections of the pattern on the goods in accordance with the guide. The back and front gores are laid on the lengthwise fold, with the side gore placed between them, this, however, on a lengthwise thread. The piecings for the gores are cut from the opposite side of the material, the straight edges of the pattern resting on the selvage edge of the goods. The strap is laid on a lengthwise thread.

The small "oo" perforations at the lower edge of the gores are for the purpose of determining the length of the skirt.

The strap which holds the pleats in place is finished with pointed ends, or a square outline may be gained by cutting off the ends of the strap about one inch from the points. A button or any fancy ornament may be used to trim the strap.

Nothing makes a more effective finish for the lower edge of the skirt than a deep hem, but the woman who can wear and afford fur will be fashionable if she adds a band of the pelt to her skirt. If fur is out of the question, however, braid the skirt and it will be in the height of style.

The Winter Tailor Made.

A charming tailored costume developed in African brown broadcloth trimmed with bands of beaver or nutria.

Delightfully smart is this tailored costume made upon Russian blouse lines. It is trimmed with fur.

Of particular interest is the skirt, which is the subject of today's dressmaking lesson.

The entire costume requires 4⅝ yards 54-inch material, but the skirt alone calls for only 2¼ yards. It is a three-piece model with high waist-line finished with a plain belt trimmed with buttons.

By studying the construction guide and following directions carefully the home dressmaker can make up the skirt in a few hours. The first step is to join the gores as notched, leaving left side seam free above large "O" perforation in front gore for placket. Pleat, creasing on lines of slot perforations; bring folded edges of corresponding lines of small "o" perforations; stitch as illustrated or trim with narrow braid; then press carefully so that the pleats will have good lines. After this the back seam may be closed.

Next, adjust 2-inch belting to position underneath upper edge of skirt for a stay and stitch upper edges together.

To make the belt, turn the hem at the front edge at notches, the large "O" perforation indicating the center front. Adjust to position and trim with buttons.

SASSY SAUCES.

Crushed Fruit Sauce.—Cream together two tablespoonfuls of butter and one cupful of powdered sugar; put the mixture over the fire and stir until it boils, adding to it at this stage a teaspoonful of arrowroot wet to a paste in cold water. Cook two minutes longer and stir in a cupful of any kind of crushed or chopped fresh fruit. Leave the sauce on the fire just long enough to become heated through and serve.

Fruit Juice Pudding Sauce.—Squeeze the juice from any kind of fruit and set it aside. Cream a tablespoonful of butter and a cupful of sugar together until they are creamy, beat in the fruit juice and set on ice until needed.

Egg Sauce.—Make a pint of white sauce; have ready a hard boiled egg chopped fine, stir it into the sauce; season to taste with salt and pepper. Good for baked, boiled or broiled fish.

Onion or Soubise Sauce.—To half a pint of white sauce add two medium sized onions which have been boiled soft and then chopped. Stir well, add salt and pepper to taste.

Tomato Sauce.—Drain half a pint of the liquor from stewed tomatoes, either canned or fresh; put it over the fire with a slice of onion and simmer fifteen minutes; take out the onion and pour the liquor upon a tablespoonful each of butter and flour which have been cooked together until they bubble. Stir to smooth thickness, season with salt and pepper and serve. This is good to pour over poached or hard boiled and chopped eggs, to serve with fish, veal, lamb, mutton or hamburg steak.

Brown Sauce.—Cook together a tablespoonful each of butter and of browned flour, letting them cook until the color begins to darken; pour upon them half a pint of clear beef stock or consomme. Stir until thick, and if a darker tint is required add a few drops of caramel or of kitchen bouquet, as well as salt and pepper.

Jelly Sauce For Pudding.—Heat together in a saucepan a large tablespoonful of butter, half a glassful of currant or other tart jelly and a tablespoonful of sugar and stir until dissolved and blended. When smooth put in a saltspoonful of cornstarch moistened to a paste with the juice of a lemon. Cook for two minutes and keep hot over boiling water until needed. If wine is used put in a gill of sherry just before serving.

Eye Strain and the Movies.

The common practice of flashing written letters and printed matter on and off the screen with almost lightning rapidity is condemned as putting the greatest strain of all upon the eyes. The audience, in its eagerness to get an intelligent understanding of the action, makes a strong effort to read the lines, but it is given no opportunity to read all of them in many instances and is kept on a strain in a strenuous effort to grasp them at a fleeting glance.

Another effect of watching moving pictures worth mentioning in this connection, although it is not injurious to the eyes, is a pronounced hypnotic experience that many people have, particularly when the performance is prolonged to more than one or two hours and is not of a very exciting nature. The drowsiness that comes over some of the audience is so complete as to induce loss of consciousness in sleep for short periods of time, in spite of all efforts to keep awake, even in well ventilated theaters.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

A well-made tailored suit, if developed along simple lines, is always in good taste. For conservative dressers this model has been especially designed. The coat is close fitting and the circular skirt has inverted plaits at either side. Velvet or satin forms the turn-down collar and cuffs. Inset pockets appear at either side of the fronts, braid being stitched over the opening. Five yards 54-inch cloth is required to make the dress in medium size.

Greeks Withdrawn From the East, Leaving Anglo-French Control

London—Messages from Malta to Lloyd's say the Greek steamship Kate and the British St. Dimitrios, from New York for the Piraeus and Salonica, have been released after having been held up at Malta since November 20, when the commercial blockade of Greece was orderede by the Entente Allies. The vessels left New York on October 27 and 23, respectively.

News of their release is taken here as confirmation of the reports that have come from Athens that the economic pressure placed on Greece by the Allies has been withdrawn as the result of a satisfactory adjustment of the questions arising out of the allied military operations through Salonica.

The most definite information that the differences between Greece and the Allies have been settled comes from Paris, where a dispatch was received from the Havas correspondent in Athens. The correspondent says the diplomatists representing the Quadruple Entente have officially informed the premier that the economic coercion of the country have been discontinued and that orders would be issued for the release of all Greek shipping in allied.

The blockade of Greece was declared in an effort to compel the government, by impressing it with the power of the Entente sea forces, to consent to the use of Greek soil as a refuge for Serbian and Anglo-French troops driven from Serbia and to withdraw opposition to certain uses of the port of Salonica by the military. Most of the Greek troops which were at the port have retired in the direction of Sorovitch and Kozam, in Greek Western Macedonia, while the Lancaza division has gone to Serbes, in accordance with an agreement reached this week.

PLAN MAKING CHURCH COMMUNITY CENTER

Reforms Are Suggested For Country House of Worship.

Columbus, O.—One out of every nine country churches has been abandoned in recent years. Only one-third are increasing in membership, and two-thirds have ceased growing. Eighty-three per cent have less than 100 members; 21 per cent have less than twenty-five, 27 per cent between twenty-five and fifty, and 34 per cent have between fifty and 100. Only 6 per cent have individual preachers, while 20 per cent share ministers with another church; 28 per cent have one-third the time of a minister, 27 per cent have one-fourth time, 14 per cent have one-fifth time, 5 per cent have one-sixth time. A large proportion of preachers receive about the same pay as a day laborer. Less than 40 per cent of the rural population are now church members.

These facts, shown in an extensive rural survey of Ohio, whose results were announced recently, are applicable to most states, according to the officers of the commission on church and country life. Plans for state surveys to secure definite data for each locality were to be formulated at the national convention here of the commission on church and country life in December, with President Wilson and Gifford Pinchot among the speakers announced.

The Ohio survey is considered the most thorough ever undertaken. But the campaign not only for surveys, but for speedy reforms to make churches community centers as well as houses of religious worship, is to be carried into every part of the country within the next year.

Here are the causes which the country church of the near future must promote in order to save itself, according to a much discussed report by President Kenyon L. Butterfield of Massachusetts Agricultural college ready for presentation to the commission: Good roads, better farming, encouragement of agricultural college extension courses, community beautification, public health and recreation, temperance, better schools, Saturday half holiday for agricultural laborers, community athletics, observance of religious and patriotic holidays and home coming weeks, community planning and contentment with farm life.

The church must become the social center for the community, with its minister leading in a variety of interest, and religion thereby will become a stronger appeal, says the Butterfield report.

Cow Scares Boy to Death.

Greensburg, Pa.—Investigation by Dr. H. Albert McMurray, coroner of Westmoreland county, into the death of James Henry Pershing, three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Pershing of Grapeville, has revealed that the child literally was frightened to death by a cow that looked through a window of his home.

PREDICTS DEMAND FOR U. S. LUMBER

China Almost Without Timber; Fair Treatment Needed.

EXPLOITATION DAY PASSED.

Federal Expert Declares Better Methods Must Be Employed in Dealing With Chinese—Can't Be Fooled Twice—Says United States Ought to Control Lumber Trade.

Washington.—In a report just made public Franklin H. Smith, commercial agent of the department of commerce, predicts a large increase in the demand for American lumber and forest products in China. At the same time he points out existing difficulties and the shortcomings of marketing methods now in vogue and makes suggestions for bettering them.

"China," he says, "is almost without timber today, and reforestation has not yet been attempted. Reforestation, even if practiced upon a huge scale, would not put China's timber on a basis to equal consumption for approximately sixty to eighty years or more. Its population is slowly shaking off the old order of existence and turning toward the new—toward greater agricultural and industrial activity, absorbing new ideas and adopting new methods. With increasing development along many lines and with the extension of the railroads, with their civilizing and their trade creating effects, there must of necessity come a larger, wider call for lumber. The United States, with its durable, easily worked and comparatively cheap timber, will, with proper precautions, control this trade.

"It may be well to emphasize the fact that the Chinese want just treatment; the day of exploitation has about passed. But because of long continued exploitation the Chinese are a bit chary about placing an order for material of which they have not detailed knowledge. This is true of lumber. Chinese have been known to accept shipments of materials of various kinds, including lumber, that were not up to specification or grade, though all efforts to get them to do business again with the concern forcing the sale are fruitless.

"A standard list price, so far as China is concerned, would result in as much business being obtained as with endless cutting. As a matter of fact, fluctuating prices have hurt rather than helped in getting Chinese orders. While the Chinese are good and keen traders, they are more content to have a fixed price for a standard article, such as lumber, where the margin of profit is not great.

"Too much grade manipulation in Oregon has been done in China shipments, and this has in a measure created a feeling of distrust toward the manufacturer, since the producer is the one on whom the blame is placed for all shortcomings. A standard China grade, from which no departure should be permitted by the manufacturers, is needed if confidence is to be held. Some of the Chinese buyers have become skeptical of the ability of the shippers to furnish cargoes of the same general quality—a situation which has arisen through the making of a grade to fit the price and the acquiescence of the mill or mills in the practice.

"With respect to selling lumber in China, no serious attempt is made to explain the excellent qualities for every purpose of woods from the United States. Engineers connected with the railways admitted in several instances that they knew nothing about the value of American woods for ties. No conclusive data had ever reached them as to durability, mechanical life, resistance to decay under varying conditions, cost and desirability of various processes of preservative treatment. Municipal governments have not been shown the value of wood block paving. Architects know positively nothing of this kind, while there are so many thousands of high grade mental defectives, the most dangerous types, at large with no state machinery to protect them or society from them till after crimes are committed.

The state board of charities reports that in New York alone there are over 32,000 mental defectives, while state institutions care for less than 5,000.

Sewing Suggestions.

When sewing long seams use wire paper clips to fasten the edges of the cloth together, and no basting will be necessary. Turn up a hem the desired depth and place the fasteners at the bottom edge to hold it in place.

In making a buttonhole in serge the material often frays badly at the cut edges. To avoid this make a mark to show the exact size and position of the buttonhole by means of a tacking thread. Then stitch around this tacking thread with the machine. Now you are ready to cut the hole between the stitching and to work the buttonhole over the machine stitching.

When boys' blouses are bought ready made it is a good plan to cut off the narrow hem and sew on a narrow belt that just fits around the waist. Finish with button and buttonhole. It saves much time putting in strings.

Where the Worry Comes.

"Are you not worried by your wife's absence?" "No. It's her return that always worries me."

HOBO FRAT DISBANDS.

Injury to "Bumming" Freshman Decides Missouri Students.

Columbia, Mo.—Announcing that they believed it best for the interests of the university, the members of the Quo Vadis club, the hobo fraternity at the University of Missouri, figuratively hopped off the blind baggage and decided that hereafter they would "ride the cushions."

The members voted to disband following the injury recently to a freshman who was "bumming" into Moberly. The discipline committee of the university issued a statement exonerating the club and saying the student injured had no connection with the organization.

The Quo Vadis club was founded in 1907 on the principle of "a thousand miles without a red." It numbered in its membership many of the leading students, including several athletes. Jack London, Homer Croy and J. Eads How were honorary members.

ONE BOY, ONE SCHOOL.

And One Teacher For One Loneliest Pupil at Chillicothe, Mo.

Chillicothe, Mo.—Livingstone county has the smallest possible school in the world—it has just one pupil. But despite the small enrollment it keeps grinding steadily away, confining its activities principally to the textbooks and eschewing football and other forms of athletics.

The school in question is in District No. 2 in Medicine township, and Miss Mary Phillips is the teacher. The list of matriculants has not been published. When the term began five weeks ago it was anticipated that a number of children would enroll, but only this one boy came, so the teacher started in with the course.

NEW YORK SUCCESS AT THE QUIRK TONIGHT

When patrons of the Quirk theatre today get their first glimpse of the newly formed Equitable Motion Picture Corporation's, "The Master of the House," they will see for the first time on the screen the work of one of the foremost and the most powerful dramatic character portrayers, Mr. Julius Steger, who, during a run of "The Master of the House," at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, New York, created a new vogue in stage husbands.

"The Master of the House," a virile and potent story with unusual heart-interest, tells of a husband who tires of his devoted wife, who, after a brief career in the brilliant ligh returns a sadder, wiser and penitent man.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

A man arrived in a certain City with almost nothing. He opened a store in that City; he started doing a good business and now is worth considerable money, but . . . . he spends all his money in another city; he drives it so far that even a toothpick is bought in that other city. WHAT DO YOU THINK OF SUCH A MAN?

The future of Fulton is going to be great. Public opinion MUST be changed and IS GOING TO BE CHANGED. Just watch us; we know that we are up against a tough proposition, but we are goodfighters and there is one thing we are proud of and that is that we are not narrow minded and get boiling mad when things don't come our way, right from the beginning.

For sale at the Chamber of Commerce: ONE MILLION HORSEPOWER OF ENERGY. Come and see us; the price is low and we almost give it away. The greatest bargain ever offered to the Fulton public and a Fulton product at that. Come early and beat the other fellow to it.

Smile that Fulton smile, it's the greatest smille on earth. The Syracuse and Chicago smiles are not in it. We have them going right now at the rate of all the energy that's in them and Still COMBINED they are unable to COME BACK, because the Fulton smile is all convincing, stands for prosperity, co-operation, combination, human service.

The Citizens National Bank cooperated with the Chamber of Commerce in allowing to have the following sticker attached to every check written in favor of members of the Christmas Club:

Dear Citizen:

You earned this money in Fulton; would you please spend it in Fulton also? Remember that every dollar spent in Fulton, will return to you some time. We wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Chamber of Commerce.

The Citizens National Bank showed good spirit; follow this admirable example. DO IT NOW.

We are out of the trenches and on the firing line; Fulton, first, last and all the time, the song of war. It is the greatest civic war ever started and will have SUCCESS.

Germans Apparently Preparing for Drive In Western Flanders

London.—An Exchange dispatch from Amsterdam says:

"A strong resumption of the German offensive in the west is expected confidently by the end of the month.

"Long convoys of munitions are pouring into Flanders.

"Duke Albrecht, of Wurtemburg, has published an Order of the Day announcing the speedy arrival of the Kaiser, who 'must witness big things, and will witness them.'"

The above is but one of the many reports received here that the Germans are preparing for a Winter drive. The official reports of the day, however, are limited to a reporof artillery engagements and aerial flights, and reads:

The British Official Press Bureau tonight gives out the following headquarters report:

"Last night two small enterprises were successfully carried out near Armentieres by our troops. The hostile trenches were entered and the occupants disposed of. The German losses are estimated at seventy killed. Ours were trifling.

"Today there were artillery bombardments by both sides around Ypres.

"The German wireless report of December 15 that we lost four aeroplanes is untrue."

The German official communication of December 15, said that four Entente aeroplanes, including one battleplane with two motors, had been brought down by German anti-craft guns, during raids on Bapaume and Peronne, in France, and Mulheim, Baden.

The French Official issued in Paris tonight says

"There has been cannonading on both sides in several sectors in Belgium, in Artois and between the Somme and the Oise.

GREECE READY TO REPEL BULGARS, THE DECISION

London—Despite Bulgaria's pledges that she will not invade Greece and will restore Ghevgeli and Doiran after the war, I am told that King Constantine is convinced King Ferdinand's promise is made to be broken and is ready when the first Bulgars cross the frontier to order the Greek army to attack them.

All the Athens newspapers except those controlled by Mr. Gounaris concede that Bulgaria means to retain Monastir. All hope that the King, while respecting the agreement with Bulgaria to preserve a neutral zone, will have a sufficient force ready to destroy Greece's ancient enemy the moment the Bulgars in their advance on Salonica begin the inevitable violation of Greek territory.

The Times' correspondent, by asking the question, "Are we on the eve of these events?" adopts the Irish method of informing the British public that the Bulgars are ready to invade Greece and that Greece is ready to attack them.

Replying to a request for a statement as to the position of Greece and the Entente Powers, Lord Robert Cecil, Parliamentary Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs, said yesterday:—

"The immediate object of the Allies has been to regularize our military position at Salonica and deny to Bulgaria and the Central Powers any control, direct or indirect, over Salonica. This we believe to be in accordance with the wishes of Greece herself.

"The British government hopes the negotiations may reach a satisfactory conclusion. It is impossible to say more at present."

O'HARA TO SING FIVE NEW SONGS AT QUIRK

"Kilkenny" is the title of the new play in which Fiske O'Hara, the favorite Irish actor-singer, will be seen at The Quirk December 30. The play is from the pen of Augustus Pitou, sr., who has furnished Mr. O'Hara with several of his most popular offerings, and is said to be the best piece the well known author has yet written. Five new songs have been provided the Irish tenor for rendition in the new comedy, the titles of which are: "That's What An Irishman Means," "Contrary Mary Clary," "Ireland is Ireland to Me," "Dear Mother Mine," and "When It's Moonlight in Mayo."

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

The press reports that the Austrian Government is mobilizing a great army of women to work in the munition factories and that "even mothers having the care of households are urged to work in the factories half a day."

The report contains no mention of any official even referring to the supposed truism that "Woman's place is in the home."

North Carolina receives special mention in the last child labor report as the state that not only refused the whole child labor program offered to its legislature but refused to the state labor commissioner permits for inspectors to enter the mills where the children are at work.

If North Carolina were an equal suffrage state it would be considered as proved that woman suffrage was a failure.

It doesn't matter how favorable the laws are to women if the judge sees the case from the man's standpoint, as he did the other day in New Jersey when a woman was denied a divorce on the ground of cruelty even though her husband testified that she was a good woman and he had spanked her.

This decision came close on a previous one in that state which granted to a man a divorce from his wife for the simple reason that she refused to live with her mother-in-law.

The city of Nashville recently turned off its red-lights and thought it would be good and happy. It was neither. It found that it had jumped from the frying pan into the fire. The men who of course ran the city house keeping were in a panic. They rang their municipal hands, as it were.

Did they appeal for help to some body of men expert in the science of government? They didn't. They telegraphed to Chicago for a woman. Note this please: They got their expert from a city where men and women together run the city government.

Last month the Board of Education reminded the city administration that the children in 35 schools were not protected from fire and the money was still withheld.

This month irate teachers have called attention to the fact that New York which fails to care for its pensioned teachers voted $200,000 for the upkeep of its Aquarium. At a meeting of the Interborough Association of Women Teachers it was reported that the teachers, who last May were granted a year's leave of absence on half pay, had in many cases received only a part or none of the money due them. "If we were but fishes, the city would value us more," sighed one as the meeting broke up. "Or voters," responded her companion.

TIME TO GET A FOCUS

That was a fine piece of advertising which graced the first page of last night's edition of The Evening Times, under the heading "Chamber of Commerce." The Chamber told us in concise language of the number of things for which the city has become famous. It is good for us to be reminded of some things that are right before our eyes. In fact, it would be a good idea for every citizen of Fulton who feels that his city isn't all it ought to be to put down on one side of a ledger account just what we have reason to be proud of, remembering that our homes would not be worth much that they would have to be sacrificed by the withdrawal of the industries of the city; then put down on the other side just what we individually, have done for the city except to confer upon it the boon of our own presence. When a balance is struck we ought to have some notion of what we have reason to be thankful for.

Whenever a city like ours is allowed to lag far behind the line of march, the road to decay is a short one—no matter how much we may regret the movement. The new secretary of the Chamber of Commerce is a hitter of the bull's eye, and it is up to every one of us to cease our shot gun sort of complaining, which scatters everywhere and wounds nowhere, and focus our efforts upon the immediate evil about us—indifference, which is capable of correction.

NEED OF CAPITAL

"Our county agent tells me," said the young farmer, "that I ought to drain that flat. I know he is right. He says all those old hill fields need lime. He is right again. Either expenditure would, I am sure, pay me twenty-five to fifty per cent on the investment next year. I need a new barn too. Every month I use the old one I am losing money. I could get a big percentage of my investment there.

"Yet I cannot do any of these things this year. I have my place just half paid for. No one I know would care to lend me money and take a second mortgage on the farm. I tried one banker and he turned me down flat. I have nothing but the farm and cannot look for credit from outside sources. So all those things have to wait until another year, when I have made another payment on the place. A man with more money could do them now and make twice as much on the farm next year as I shall. They needn't tell me that a poor man can do as good farming as the man who has something ahead."

This man's case is not exceptional. Thousands and thousands of farmers cannot make expenditures that would unquestionably pay well, for the simple reason that they lack the money and cannot get it. So many things on the farm require immediate expenditures that the farmer of average means cannot do all the desirable things presented to him. Cash in hand is a necessary factor in good farming.

These facts suggest two things: One is that the average farmer has too much invested in land in proportion to his working capital. The other is that a system of co-operative rural credits that will take account of how money is to be spent, as well as of how it is secured, is a very real need in this country.—Country Gentleman.

on the account of the person receiving the gift, which will be exchanged at current prices only.

A central clearing house or blacklist will be established for the names of customers who continually make unjust claims or who return C. O. D. packages. Persons who reserve articles will have to pay a 25 per cent. deposit. All merchants joining the movement will issue a tag of uniform size to be used on all articles that are entitled to the return privilege. If the tag is removed an article may not be returned.

There is no reason why such arrangements should not in time benefit both the purchasing public and the merchant. There are many customers who insist upon receiving all kinds of special privileges from merchants, the latter often suffering losses by accommodating them, where, on the other hand, merchants often dispose of secondhand articles as original because they have stretched the courtesies to the first mentioned customer and have to dispose of soiled or slightly used articles.

In general, such movements, are not only economic in character, but they tend to educate the customers in regarding each others rights while at the same time yielding reasonable trade protection for the merchants.—Auburn Citizen.

THE SAVING STEP

Where the Wilson administration had aimed to sweep the Pacific Ocean clean of American flags, big business steps in and saves the situation. That most un-American and thoroughly indefensible seaman's act will after all not be able to submerge completely the Stars and Stripes. Seven small ships have been purchased by the newly-formed International Corporation and these will continue to traverse the old routes and carry the flag as of yore. That will at least save the United States from absolute eclipse on the Pacific and at the same time rescue our country from an ignominious position. The International Corporation was organized to promote American trade in all foreign fields. That is its sole purpose. It stands somewhat in the position of those old business men like Girard, Welsh, the elder Morgan and Astor, who were world-merchants and some of them mariners. This newest of big business enterprises will be a banker, a shipper, a promoter, a merchant in the inter-national domain, and it will work under the Stars and Stripes. A determination to keep American ships on the Pacific, even if they be a small fleet, may or may not prove sound business, considering our foolish marine laws, but it will command the applause of the country.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

WHAT WE OWE THE COW

Out in Wisconsin a project is said to be brewing to provide neatly-decorated quarters for the cattle, with [illegible] on the wall; and it is even proposed that graphophone music be furnished in the stable during thep rocess of milking, as conducive to a larger yield; the supposition being that bossy, lulled by the muse, will "give down" more liberally. So runs the story, and whether it is true or not it is suggestive of the new position occupied by the Great American Cow.

It is recorded by the Rochester Times, incident to the convention of the New York State Dairymen's Association in that city, that in Buffalo Lady Pontiac Johanna, "a well-cared-for and productive bovine, has just broken the world's record for butter production by yielding 658 pounds of milk in one week, from which was made nearly 42 pounds of butter." As 42 pounds of gilt-edge butter at the current top-notch rate of 50 cents per pound would be $21, Lady Pontiac Johanna is literally worth her weight in gold—if she can keep it up. And certainly the patient beasts that supply delicious milk and cream throughout their natural lives and at the end furnish meat as a crowning beneficence, are entitled to lace curtains and graphophone music every hour in the day, if need be.

In an enlightened age not only must the unsanitary cowshed go; bossy must be treated upon the new humanitarian order and provided with modern amusement as well as conveniences.—Auburn Adv.-Journal.

NEED OF GOOD COUNTRY SCHOOLS

One of the salient features of Secretary Lane's annual report which is being made public in sections, is its [illegible] In the words of [illegible] is no sense in talking of the charms of country life and the independence and dignity of producing from the soil of the school at command is no more modern than the wooden plough.

"Our aim should be to identify the school with the farm and the village and develop a new respect in fathers and mothers for the school as a practical and not a mere scholastic institution. The problem is only one of popularization. Here is a call for the co-operative leadership of the Government.

"It can best be done by showing the picked teachers of the country the model schools. The quickest and surest way to set this country aflame with zeal for a better type of country school would be to show the teachers such schools, make them live in them and learn from them by seeing them in action."

Here is realization of a great national requirement and constructive suggestion as to the way to obtain it. This country has few necessities so urgent as that of putting rural schools on an up-to-date basis. It is gratifying that the Secretary of the Interior attaches to this topic an importance fully commensurate with it.—Buffalo Times.

A Very Old Rule.

The oldest mathematic book in the world is believed to be the "Papyrus Rhind" in the British museum, professed to have been written by Ahmes, a scribe of King Ra-a-us, about the period between 2000 and 1700 B. C. This "Papyrus Rhind" was translated by Eisenlohr of Leipzig, and it was found to contain a rule for making a square equal in area to a given circle. It was not put forth as an original discovery, but as the transcript of a treatise 500 years older still, which sends us back to approximately [illegible] B. C., when [illegible]

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

This is the season of the year when the bitter truth often is impressed upon us that the world has scant respect for the penniless man. It cannot understand why if he has good health and the use of all his faculties, he should be penniless. When a man who has worked continuously for a number of years loses his position for any reason, the first thought of those who know him is—"Well, he's been working steadily all this time, he must have quite a tidy sum saved up." Therefore his acquaintances do not take it kindly when he approaches them for help. They think—"He had as much chance to save as I did; why didn't he do it?" But the man who asked for help feels that he has not been treated right. He says his treatment to the fact that he is "down and out," and the next development is that he loses his self-respect.

Nothing is so calculated to make a man respect himself and to make the community in which he lives and works respect him, as his having a certain sum of money back of him. It gives solidity to his business and weight to his opinions, for, it is argued, the man who has worked, provided for his family, given his children an education and saved money, must have character.

The number of workers who spend as they earn and all they earn is almost beyond belief. The cities are full of them. Loss of work, illness, or some unusual call on a worker's earnings leaves him practically a pauper. In his work he must be a slave or a machine in uncongenial employment, for he has nothing on which to draw while he seeks for something better.

Thrift has been well described as the science of spending upward. Without thrift one debars one's self from the glorious privilege of independence. To spend money wisely and to the best advantage one needs to exercise forethought, or one may accumulate unsuitable and unnecessary things.

Along with forethought must go order. Acquire the habit during the incoming year of keeping an account of all personal expenditures down to the last penny. Train the children to do the same with their pocket money. It will be ag reat educational power. "Never treat money affairs with levity," said Bulwer Lytton. "Money is character."

It no doubt took a great deal of self-denial for a soldier during the Civil War to save money, but "Private Joe" Fifer, as he was known throughout the middle West in the eighties, did it. He saved $150 of his hard earned money to pay for an education and after the war was over he began to study law, though he had begun life as a bricklayer. By dint of the same perserverance with which he saved the money for his education, he became governor of the State of Illinois. It is the discipline of self-control and frugality that brings results.

When Moore cut the top of the bucket, out rolled a stream of silver coins of Spanish mintage of a face value of about $3,000.

PLANNING WHEN A CITY IS SMALL

A Matter of Vital Concern For All Municipalities.

LACK OF CIVIC IMAGINATION

The Villages of Today Will Become the Big Cities of the Future, and They Can Be Planned Best While Still Small.

By FRANK KOESTER.
[Author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance."]

Ordinarily city planning is regarded as being an activity for large cities alone, but it is just as important for the small city, if not more so, and engaging more completely the attention of all the citizens it becomes for the small city an even more vital concern.

The chief thing that prevents cities from being properly planned is lack of civic imagination. The citizens of a small town seldom act as though they expected their town to become a large city. They may individually at times dream of a great city spreading out around the nucleus in which they live, and they very frequently boast of the progress of the town during the previous decade, but the time when their town is to be a great city seems so far distant that as a whole they do not imagine that it will ever occur. The few enthusiastic souls who individually believe it are patronized or laughed at, and the citizens as a body do not have the assurance to walk out into unoccupied fields and lay out sites for streets, parks and public structures which may not come into existence until a century later, if ever.

Time quickly slips by, and the sites for great improvements which once might have been laid out and reserved become impossible to secure save at enormous expense. It thus happens that many cities have plans originally determined by the fancy of the homewardly meandering cow, and great volumes of traffic must indefinitely follow the paths thus marked out unless expensive changes be made.

America is bound to grow vastly in the next century, and many villages of today will become big cities of the future. Yet few, if any, of such towns have plans as yet laid out, and many a patient cow is still contributing her humble share to the city planning of the future, while worthy citizens are less usefully employed.

The expense of preparing a plan for a city while the city is still small is so insignificant compared with the benefits to be derived that it should not enter into consideration. The cost of such a plan is the best possible investment that a city can make not only in the saving of future expense, but for its psychological value, for when the future of a city is planned that of itself supplies an incentive to growth, as there is something definite to be accomplished, and the town is more likely to increase in size and importance through having such a plan than where its growth is purely haphazard. At the same time its enterprising citizens are more likely to remain and help build up the town than to go to larger cities, while, besides retaining its own population, it draws from less enterprising cities, and its growth is accordingly still further stimulated.

The small town should begin at an early period to accustom itself to proper regulations of different kinds. Only by suitable regulation may the plans, once adopted, be carried out.

It has sometimes happened in America that towns have been laid out along certain lines, but have grown off at one side in a manner not intended by their designers. Such towns are often cited as examples of the futility of attempting to forecast the future of civic developments. The absurdity of laying out a plan and then expecting a city to develop along such lines of its own accord, and when it does not the added absurdity of pointing out its failure to do so as an argument against city planning, are an adding of insult to injury. It would be as sensible to erect a grape arbor and expect the vines to train themselves without ties as to expect a city to follow its plan without the ties of suitable regulations. Indeed, such regulations are an absolute necessity in training a city's growth, and coincidently with the laying out of its plans the regulations which are to carry it into effect should be formulated and put into operation. Proper provision should, of course, be made for such modifications of the original plan as may be required by future conditions impossible to forecast, while at the same time not permitting private interests to block the carrying out of the plan for merely selfish ends.

City Planning In Colleges.

"In England, France and especially in Germany every large university offers a course in city planning which is attended by several hundred students," says Professor L. S. Smith of the University of Wisconsin. "If American students became as interested in the improvement of their cities it would not be long before the cities of this country were far in advance of the beautiful cities of Europe, because American energy is so tremendous."

At present only three or four American universities offer courses in city planning. Harvard, Columbia and Wisconsin are the leaders in this work.

SUMMER TRAINING CAMPS FAVORED

College Heads Urge Students to Attend Them.

INTEREST RAPIDLY GROWING

Advisory Committee of University Presidents Urges Continuation of Work on Broader Lines to Increase the Student Enrollment—Expects More Camps Next Year.

New York.—The advisory committee of university presidents formed to assist in the work of building up a national reserve corps among college students adopted a report recommending that the heads of all colleges of the country encourage the students to join the summer military training camps established by the government for the purpose of strengthening the campaign for national preparedness. The committee, besides passing the resolution at a recent meeting here, also indorsed the work that has been done at the military camps and laid special emphasis on the educational value of the training.

John G. Hibben, president of Princeton university, was chairman at the meeting. Two additional members were elected to the committee, Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college, and A. C. Humphreys, president of Stevens institute. Among those present were President Henry S. Drinker of Lehigh, President H. A. Garfield of Williams, Chancellor J. H. Kirkland of Vanderbilt university and Brigadier General E. W. Nichols, superintendent of the Virginia Military institute. Major General Leonard Wood, representing the government, was also there to hear the opinions of the committee and make recommendations to Washington accordingly.

Others who are members of the committee but were unable to attend the meeting are Presidents A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, Arthur T. Hadley of Yale, H. B. Hutchins of the University of Michigan, George H. Denny of the University of Alabama, Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California, J. G. Schurman of Cornell and Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois and Dr. John H. Finley, commissioner of education of New York.

The members of the committee discussed informally the benefits which have accrued from the government's military camps and urged the continuation of the work on broader lines to increase the student enrollment. As a result it is expected that the government will establish more of these training camps next year for students and business men.

The committee was formed three years ago at the suggestion of Major General Wood, who asked the heads of various institutions to aid in the development of the summer training camps of college students.

The first camps were established in the summer of 1913 at Gettysburg and at the Presidio. The course of instruction lasted five weeks. There were 300 students in attendance. In 1914 camps were established at Burlington, Vt.; Asheville, N. C., and Ludington, Mich. The number of students attending jumped to 700. This year more than 1,000 were enrolled, and an additional camp was opened at Plattsburg.

"We regard this movement as in no way militaristic," said a member of the committee. "Its object is to train the students of our colleges and therefore serve a useful purpose to the country. The education which the students receive under officers of the army is of the greatest value to them and to the nation, and we feel that the summer camps are agencies for good which the universities should do their utmost to encourage."

Centralia, Kan.—If a man is as old as he feels Eli Avery must be about forty years younger than the eighty-four years the family Bible says he is. He has built a cement retaining wall eighty feet long and four feet high around his residence property at Goff, mixing the concrete and doing all the work himself.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Secretary McAdoo's fanciful tabulation of Treasury prospects, accompanied by his grotesque suggestions for further burdens of direct taxation, was issued November 26. The Secretary lays special emphasis upon the demanded expenditure for national defense—which he sets at about $93,000,000—and shapes his course accordingly.

Now, let us suppose that the last Repnblican Administration had been confronted with a similar problem on the corresponding day. That is to say, let us suppose that on November 26, 1911, the year before the last Presidential election, the Republicans had had to provide for $93,000,000 of defense money—what could they have done?

They could have paid for it out of the Treasury surplus—which then amounted to $129,787,547.91 without levying a single dollar of new taxes. They would have had some $36,000,000 left; and each day thereafter would have shown an increasing Treasury balance, until, a year later, they would have had more than $55,00,00 of surplus on hand. And this result would not have been producerd by any legerdemain of book-keeping.

Today the Democrats must levy more taxes because they have spent the money accumulated by Republicans; and in another year they themselves expect to be more than $100,000,000 in the hole. hTe contrast is not only between two impressive sets of figures. It is between two parties and between two policies.

Which is the better—the Republican method of paying as you go and of laying up a surplus; or the Democratic method of squandering all along the line and of soaking the people for more taxes?

Those American statesmen who profess to believe that there is no danger of the dumping of cheap products in this country after the close of the European war would do well to ponder upon a word of warning which has been uttered by the London Morning Post to the people of Great Britain. At a time when the discussion of domestic problems is discouraged by the government, the Post feels impelled to say:

"Military victory is still far away, but even military victory will not save this nation if it is won by others and not by ourselves and if it is accompanied by commerciall defeat. We understand that those German industries which rely on the export trade are at present time producing, not so much for export, as for dumping after the war. The State is at present subsidizing these German industries for the express purpose of accumulating reserves which will be used for deluging our markets with cheap goods when the war is over. How are we going to meet this menace?

"This country must have a national protective tariff if it is to survive the fierce commercial conflict which is sure to follow this war. We may be told that even to mention this subject is what is called a 'breach of the party truce.' If it has come to this, that the party truce is to prevent this country from adopting, in time a policy necessary to its salvation, then, the party truce would be rather a source of peril than of safety. But we prefer to believe that this war has raised the question of imperial union and trade protection out of the realm of party politics and placed it among the questions of national urgency which are to be settled without reference to party."

MORE UNDERMANNED BATTLE SHIPS

While it is probably true that the battle ships Vermont and New Hampshire will be unable, because they are seriously undermanned, to accompany the Atlantic Fleet on its winter cruise it is no less true that this regrettable situation may not be attributed to any halt or diminution in enlistments. In the current report of Secretary Daniels it is set down that more than one hundred thousand candidates for entrance presented themselves in 1915 and that only about one-sixth of this number were accepted. Even allowing a large percentage for rejections in consequence of physical defects and for other reasons, these figures show that no lack of eagerness to enlist exists.

The fault must therefore be sought elsewhere, mainly, let it be said at once, in Congress. The navy is now and has been for several season at its full authorized strength, but so rigorous and unwise is this limitation by law that the Navy Department cannot supply the shore stations or man the ships in commission or about to be commissioned, even estimating for reductions of full complements in minor classes. More than a year ago Congress was informed both of the enormous deficiency, then stated to be 18,000 men, and of the increase in this number that must follow when newer ships were assigned to sea duty.

It is unfortunate also that Secretary Daniels has not recommended an adequate number of men to fill the actual and prospective vacancies, though possibly he is not permitted by Naval committees to have a free hand. If the navy is undermanned now and in 1916, what then will it be in 1917, when the minimum required will exceed 75,000 enlisted men, of whom nearly one-quarter will be still in the training stage?—N. Y. Herald.

The exhibit of the past season closed on Saturday, December 4, with a million dollars profit, Mr. Pentelow stated.

In regard to the present season in the land of sunshine he says—"The great plains are putting on their coat of green and flowers of so many varieties are taking the attention of the Eastern people. The roses of wonderful beauty are as common as the daisies in Oswego county, and the poinsettas in their brilliant red coloring are everywhere. The W. C. T. U. met yesterday afternoon in State street church. Notwithstanding the storm there was a good attendance and an interesting program, in charge of Mrs. S. H. Wright, County Superintendent of Naricotics. It was voted to give to the Salvation Army $5.00 toward their Christmas check.

On the third Friday in January there will be held at the home of Mrs. William Sylvester of Oneida st., a "shower," consisting of towels and useful articles for Mrs. Bullock's Home for Girls, located at Elmira, N. Y. A pleasing feature of yesterday's meet- was the music. Several Temperance selections were nicely rendered by a quartet comprising Mrs. Balch, son and daughter. After refreshments were served the meeting adjourned to meet in January at the Baptist church.

Nothing New.

"I see," said Bilkins, "that a French scientist has discovered a method for staving off old age."

"Well, what of it?" demanded Wilkins. "There's nothing new in that. A man can stave off old age by jumping off the Eiffel tower, or dropping a lighted match in a powder barrel while sitting on it, or by rocking the boat when he's out in the water, or by riding over Niagara falls sitting astride of a log. WEST SIDERS PLAYED JOGGERS

Two of Three Games Won by West Side Team Last Night From Onyx Team.

The West Side Bowling team in the City League took the first two of the three matches bowled last night with the Jogalongs.

The West Side team won their matches on consistent bowling, but in the third stanza they fell down, with one exception, each man bowling far below his standard. The Onyx team, to defeat their opponents in the third set, were not obliged to bowl an exceptionally high game, but they did better in this match than in the two previous.

Not a one of the ten men on the two teams bowled 200 and they are all capable of rolling up this number of pins. Brown of the West Side team, with 195 pins to his credit in the first match, won honors for high game and Stauring of the opposing team took high total with 532.

The results of the matches were as follows:

Doughty Captain Retains Faith in His Force—Fraternity Men to Be Made to Work.

A changed linup will represent the Maccabee quintet tonight in the game with the Gamma Eta Gamma team of Syracuse University at Church's hall. Capt. Ives, as a result of Thursday night's defeat, has decided to make shifts which will tend to make for better team work.

Manager Snow of the Maccabees is not discouraged at the outcome of the first game of the season, as the possibility for a victory was very remote owing to the greater experience of the Y. M. H. A. quintet which has had no trouble in maintaining a reputatioi for the past five years as the premier amateur basketball team of Central New York. It can be safely said that no team will oppose the local outfit during the present season as adept at guarding as the Syracuse boys. Their system of guarding was perfect to a fine point, which was shown by the two field goals garnered by the local team. Time and again when the Fulton forwards would advance the badd down the floor they were brought to an abrupt stop upon meeting the entire quintet of the Y. M. H. A. spread across the floor.

The Syracuse University outfit, although made up of speed merchants, will bec losely watched, the Maccabees using the same system of guarding as the Y. M. H. A. team, in which less attention was paid to the ball with closer watching of the advancing forwards.

An attendance fully as large as attended Thursday's event is expected to welcome the 'Varsity boys. A preliminary will precede the main game in whic hthe newly organized State St. Athletic club quintet will oppose the team from the Baptist church. Dancing will follow the basketball games.

The men who will represent the Syracus e team are: "Chick" Meehan, quarterback on the victorious football eleven of the past season; Cooper, captain of the cross-country team; Newberry and Braney, two members of the Varsity football team; Ward, Hayes and Jones of this city.

THE COUNTY HOSPITAL BUDGET REDUCED

The Board of Managers of the tuberculosis hospital recommended to the Supervisors at yesterday's session the sale of much of the land belonging to the institution and a reduction in the budget from $31,700 to $24,900. In selling the land it is proposed to over streams of water which afford retain only enough to hold control supply at the hospital.

The following amounts are recommended to be appropriated: For maintenance, $14,800; for salaries, $7,000; for completion of the annex by changes etc., $1,500; for furnishing the annex, $2,000.

$3,458 now in the hands of the county treasurer to the credit of the institution through the sale of produce and the board of patients, together with the omount received from the sale of the farm, for the erection of a central heating plant, and the building of an ice house for storing meat, etc.

COUNTY TAX RATIO GOES UP 8 PER CENT.

Thec ounty ratio for next year will be .80 per $100 of valuation as against .72 for 1915. The exact ratio on the State tax has not been determined but it will probably be .21 per $100. Last year, of course itw as smaller.

Many of the supervisors have not yet figured their ratios but this will be done early next week. It is conceded that the tax rate in the towns and cities will be considerably increased over lost year. The city rate for 1915 was 1.47 but this year it will be considerably higher.

"A HERALD OF PROGRESS"

Bowser's Natural History

But His Writing Will Never See Print.

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

After Mr. Bowser had smoked awhile after dinner he blandly said to Mrs. Bowser:

"There was a gentleman in the office this afternoon who gave me a bright idea, and I have started to act upon it."

"You are always acting upon somebody's bright ideas," she replied, with a little sarcasm in her voice.

"Oh, well, if you are going to talk that way at the beginning we won't talk at all."

"But I want to hear about the bright idea. You are always looking for it, and perhaps you have struck it this time."

It took Mr. Bowser two minutes to get over the little jar to his feelings, and then he said:

"The gentleman told me that there was a new magazine coming out. It is to be called the Naturalist. Its contributors are to be paid 40 cents a word, which is the highest price any contributor was ever paid. Two words and a half, Mrs. Bowser, represent $1. When a man can write a 500 word contribution in an hour, perhaps you will agree that it is rather a bright idea."

"I certainly will," replied Mrs. Bowser. "You interest me. Please tell me all about it."

Mr. Bowser pursed his lips, put on an air of great dignity and took from his pocket a manuscript and unfolded it. Then he said:

"After the gentleman left the office I turned to and dashed off the following article. It came to me as easy

THE RABBIT AS A SWIMMER.

as grease, and it reads to me like a dream. Listen closely, Mrs. Bowser, and do not interrupt me. My subject is the rabbit, and here is what I wrote:

"'The rabbit is found in every part of the United States.

"'He is a white and gray animal about as large or a little larger than the cat.

"'He is a very harmless animal and no incident has yet been recorded where he has attacked a human being.

"'The principal diet of the rabbit is beefsteak and smoked ham, but when pressed by hunger he will eat cranberries, sour apples and potatoes. Cases have been known where he filched and carried off from a house mince pies and strawberry shortcakes.

"'That the rabbit might some time want to climb a tree after chestnuts, nature made his fore legs much the longest that they might reach around the trunk of a tree.

"'The mother rabbit brings forth thirty-two offsprings at a birth, and therefore there is not much danger of the rabbit becoming extinct for a long time to come.

"'The rabbit has been known to follow a country schoolma'am for three miles on the highway in broad daylight, but he offered her no violence and was probably actuated by curiosity alone.

"'A rabbit can run at the rate of fifty miles an hour when pursued by a dog. When pursued by two dogs his gait is double that of course.

"'Rabbits have been known to swim across a lake three miles wide.

"'If a quart of sweet cider is placed at the back door at night two or three rabbits will come and drink it all up before daylight, and they will be found a short distance away in such a state of intoxication that they can be gathered up without trouble.

"'The alleged rabbit pie served out at hotels and restaurants is made only of mutton and is an insult to Bunny and should be stopped by the law.

"'A rabbit has been known to live to the age of eight years, but he was owned by an old maid who fed him on taffy and gave him a feather pillow to sleep on. The average life may be given at four years. At the end of that time he has had fun enough to be glad to go.

"'The rabbit fur can be so dyed that a garment made of it can be called otter, beaver, lynx, mink or sealskin, and the animal is not praised as he should be.

"'The rabbit has no tail to speak of. Nature made him thus that he might not be caught and held fast while going through the thickest of thorns.

"'His large ears were placed on his head for ornament, the same as a mule's.

"'Any one carrying a rabbit's foot around in his hind pocket is sure to have good luck.'"

Mr. Bowser silently folded the manuscript and returned it to his pocket and looked at Mrs. Bowser and asked:

"Can you deny that the gentleman gave me a bright idea and that I have not worked it up to the best advantage?"

"Mr. Bowser," said she in reply, "you might have both hind pockets and all other pockets in your clothing stuffed full of rabbit's feet and they would not be sufficient to get that article accepted even by a family almanac!"

"By George, woman, what are you saying!" he exclaimed.

"Keep cool, sir—keep cool! Don't go to shouting or gesturing or getting unduly excited. If the editor of the Naturalist should ever receive such a contribution and he had a supply of pens and ink handy and had a little time to write, he would answer:

"'It is estimated that the rabbits of the United States pull down and devour at least 1,600 persons a year.

"'No rabbit was ever yet known to eat mince pies. They prefer custard pies.

"'The hind legs of a rabbit are the longest, as you ought to have known. They were made thus that he could climb a tree wrong end to and be all ready to come down again with promptness and dispatch if alarmed.

"'You are mistaken about the number of offspring at a birth. It is 150 instead of thirty-two. This is that the rabbit may in time crush out all the beef trusts.

"'No rabbit was ever satisfied with running fifty miles an hour. He started right off the mark at a pace of 125. If there were two dogs after him he went so fast that the human eye could not detect him.

"'All the rabbits in Ohio and Michigan swim across Lake Erie twice a day for the fun of the thing.

"'No rabbit with any self respect would get drunk on sweet cider. You must set out old rye or dry champagne.

"'Your rabbit pies of the restaurants and hotels not only contain mutton, but beef hash, ham hash, veal hash or other kinds of hash. The rabbit needn't feel insulted at the name.

"'Nature did not give the rabbit a tail because he was the last animal made and there were no tails to spare.

"'A rabbit was given large ears not for ornament, but that he might hear all the gossip going on in the woods. You may have observed many women with ears almost as large.

"'As to rabbits' feet bringing good luck, more than 10,000 men are drowned every year with their pockets stuffed with the tokens. Better carry around with you the tip of a donkey's tail.'

"That's what he would think of your bright idea, Mr. Bowser," said Mrs. Bowser as she finished.

Mr. Bowser sat with his mouth half open and the glare of a ferocious panther in his eyes, but he answered never a word.

"You had better have written of the rhinoceros in Africa, for you know as much about him as you do of the rabbits of the United States."

There was a decided twitch to Mr. Bowser's ear like a horse that is trying to make out a sound.

"We have three different works on natural history in the house, and yet you have never opened one of them. You broadly state that his fore legs are the longest. Our butcher has half a dozen hanging outside of his door every day. One glance of your eyes would have told you that you were wrong. All the other statements in your article are equally as absurd. In fact, Mr. Bowser"—

"Yes, my lady, in fact!" repeated Mr. Bowser, as he rose up and started for the hall tree.

"Are you going out?" was asked.

There was no answer. Mr. Bowser got into his overcoat and hat and banged the front door after him. He was not going to hunt the ferocious rabbit nor let the rabbit hunt him, but he wanted to walk and think over that bright idea which the gentleman had so kindly given him and which Mrs. Bowser had jumped on with both feet. As he walked he brought up at the drug store on the corner. He didn't enter the store, but stood outside humped over as became a forlorn husband. The druggist saw him through the window and came to the door and asked:

"Bowser, is there anything wrong?"

"Naw," was the gruff reply.

"I thought there was, old man, from your looking so used up. I think I am right. I think you and Mrs. Bowser have had a discussion, and you have come out of it with the loss of one leg, as usual. Go home, Bowser—go home and be glad that you have got such a smart wife."

What Makes a Home?

When we say "homemaker" we usually have in mind the woman who keeps and manages the house. But, truly, is it fair to put the entire burden of homemaking on the shoulders of woman alone? Home is, in the last analysis, an attitude of mind, a feeling, an emotion of several persons toward one another, and not simply a pride in material possessions.

No matter how strongly a woman synthetized in herself all the instincts and feeling which go to make a home, she cannot alone create the true home unless she is supported by the other members of the family. Father is a homemaker, too, as truly as mother in the higher sense, and each other member must feel his share and responsibility in making the home spirit.

We do not mean, of course, that father must wash the dishes or hire and fire the help, but that he should feel his importance in family councils and the need for his judgment above and beyond the mere paying of the bills. The old Spartan type of father, whose very glance made the children tremble and who thought himself the divinely appointed agent over his children's very lives, has happily disappeared. But the modern parent, who has taken his place, seems to have gone to the other extreme of good natured indifference. This is just as unwholesome and unbalanced. Father's opinion, his taste, his co-operation, his strength, are needed equally to support his side of the arch of home.

When the woman is held solely responsible as the homemaker, the children, instead of doing their share, stand around and expect to receive the pleasures and benefits of a fine home spirit without creating this spirit themselves. It is not possible for the woman to carry this load which should be distributed among all the members of the family. The children must be encouraged, each in his own small way, to do some work and take some share in the duties or they will never fully appreciate the pleasures they receive. A definite daily task, like emptying a wastebasket or taking care of pets, putting up a little shelf or helping to dust or sweep, will engender in the child's mind its close relationship to the home. Only by personal service and doing, either with the hand or heart, do we come to love our surroundings or the people who dwell in them. Only by having a real part in the life of the home can each member feel that it is his home. Too often we feel that the attitude of the father, say, is that it is the mother's home, where she entertains her women friends at afternoon gatherings, where she has chosen the furniture, where everything is arranged and ordered as a setting for herself.

Again, too often the young son feels that his mother's parlor is no place for him. Why should it be when its gilt chairs and gilt clocks and fragile draperies are far removed from his masculinity? Home to him probably is the den which he has helped to arrange and decorate with pennants and footballs or where he keeps his books and tools. The one great need in modern home life seems to be to draw the members of a family to the home through greater individual responsibility toward the home.

Cut of tan broadcloth, edged with beaver and smocked at the belt and high collar, this fetching suit gives an ultra result. The apron front is apparently held by four self buttons and verges into military severity. The charming little close turban has a band of worsted roses in pastel shades with gold centers.

All kinds of warlike instruments appear among the Christmas toys, from battleships and airships and submarines to the same old airguns, tin swords and tin soldiers. Even the baby boy not to be "raised to be a soldier" will hear the blare of the bugle and the rolling of the drum while the older tots march to battle. In the days of peace this sort of thing would have been taken as a matter of course. The toy to be worth anything would have to be out of the ordinary. Lovers of peace and haters of militarism, however, may take comfort in the hope that the children will really not know what it is all about. The symbols and implements of war will soon be discarded for rattles and dolls and books and sleds and skates.

The passing of a leader like Booker T. Washington punctuates an epoch, but not with a period. The good work will go on, under lesser men, perhaps, but its impetus is too great to be wholly checked.

Among those also who have taken to wearing the Charley Chaplin mustache may be mentioned several of Carranza's bunch, evidence that some Mexicans are Americanizing, all right.

An authority on fads says that the slouch so popular with some young women is to be cut out. Well if the society grin which crops out before the camera would also fade.

Owing to scarcity of the right kind of steel for ribs, umbrellas may go higher. However, that fact won't worry those who have a long reach on rainy days.

An old song ran, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." All the same just when the farmers are the richest ever Uncle Sam's pocketbook is empty.

While putting millions into preparedness against a possible outside foe, it is well not to overlook the foe we have always with us, the white plague.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

For Holiday Festivities.

Evening frock of pale green chiffon combined with satin and cream lace.

An evening gown of unusual charm is shown here. It is fashioned of chiffon and lace, the color scheme being light pink and cream.

In medium size the dress requires 1⅝ yard lining, 5⅝ yards 36-inch chiffon, ⅝ yard all-over lace and 1 yard 27-inch satin.

First pleat the front and back of the waist, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations and tack. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched; then hem the right side of the back as notched. Adjust 2-inch belting under the waist and stitch lower edges together.

The puff sleeve is very dainty. Close the seam as notched, gather on crossline of small "o" perforations, draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape underneath. Sew in armhole as notched.

For the skirt, pleat the back gore, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforation and tack. Join gores as notched. Close back seam from large "O" perforation to lower edge; finish edges above for a placket.

Finish the flounces with the fur.

Now, turn upper edges of front and back girdle sections on slot perforations and press. Gather side edges between double "TT" perforations. Close the right side seam, notches and edges even; draw gathers and stitch boning or tape about 7½ inches along under gathers. Finish the left side edges for a closing. Adjust to position on front and back, center-fronts and center-backs even, upper edge of girdle along crossline of double "oo" perforations; tack invisibly at center-front, center-back and at under-arm seam.

An artificial rose is added to the girdle, and the effect is highly artistic.

A [illegible] WALKER

Gray astrakhan and sealskin have been effectively combined to give this [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] carrying wrinkles.

HOW TO SMOCK.

Better to Practice on Dimity Before You Tackle a Silk Garment.

Crossbarred dimity is best to learn to smock on, as the lines are a great help in preparing the work. There should be about three spaces to an inch. The part to be smocked must first be gathered into tucks of even size with black thread. After some practice these spaces can be measured with the eye, but at first the crossbarred or dotted material is a big help and time saver. After gathering with strong black thread as many rows half an inch apart as will cover the space that is to be smocked the garment is ready for the actual smocking.

Mercerized floss in medium weight in double thread is the best cotton to use. The twisted cotton single is also effective for coarse work. This floss holds its color and comes in attractive shades. The stitches are made very much like the featherstitch and have the same number of variations. The featherstitch is done toward the sewer, whereas smocking is worked away from the sewer. Every time a new stitch is taken one picks up a tuck previously made by the black bastings. After some practice it will be easy to pick up just the right amount of material from each tuck, but everything depends upon the evenness of the spacing in the beginning. The different stitches are made by changing the thread from one side of the needle to the other, just as in featherstitching. The combination of stitches with themselves and with each other is so endless that no two garments need ever be alike, and the combining of colors and materials makes this work very fascinating.

It is possible to buy patterns for smocked dresses for adults and children. It should also be noted that smocking will take two and a half times as much material as will appear when the work is done—that is, in order to obtain half a yard of smocked material a yard and a quarter must be used. Of course this can be gathered up into a smaller space or stretched to a larger one, but that is the average. The materials used for a grown person's dress must be soft, for the fullness [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] advantages of smocked dresses for children [illegible].

Don't Let Fatigue Get You!

The fine art of discovering their physical limitations is something all women should strive to attain. Half the cases of nervous prostration, of disease of mind or body, arise from the absence of this very bit of knowledge. "Stop just short of being tired," is the advice which all physicians give their patients. This is the ounce of prevention idea that stands before the folly of the pound of cure, and yet not one woman in ten pays any heed to it.

The sensation of fatigue is the indication of your particular limitations. Give up the theater and supper in the evening if you have had a hard day and are feeling tired at night. "I know I ought not to do it, but I just can't resist," is the criminal confession of most women.

Any doctor in any city, town or country will tell you that what women need is not medicine, but consciences—consciences that make them stop short of being tired. "All we can do," the doctors say, "is to patch up what they persist in tearing down. We find it almost hopeless to arouse them to a sense of their duty toward their husbands, families and themselves in this respect, so we have learned to shrug our shoulders and patch 'em up.

"Now, fatigue actually means a decrease of vital force. If up to the point of feeling tired you have required all the vital energy you have been using to keep you in good physical condition it is a foregone conclusion that your limit has been reached when the first signs of fatigue begin to show themselves. That is the time for you to drop everything and rest. Sleep that has relaxation in it is the best aid to insure it.

"Not one woman in a hundred knows how to rest. Despite the fact that chair backs and chair arms are provided to coax the sitter into relaxation, the average woman seats herself upon a chair with the grim determination of helping the chair hold her in place. How many women of your acquaintance know even how to let their hands drop idly in their laps? Not many! The strain is felt all along the arms. They are not left there in the laps, but actually held there by the gripping power of its master, the will.

"It is not massage that really keeps a woman youthful looking; it is nothing more than the relaxation that she is forced into by the temporarily superior power of the will of the one treating her. Youth and beauty and charm are not only born of relaxation and composure, but are kept alive by it. No power on earth can keep youth alive when old age in the form of unrest of mind and body is persistently working against it.

"Study relaxation in everything, how to walk without weariness, to sit without restraint and to live without haste. A lot of cares that you have gripped frantically have needed no grip at all. Most of the 'worries' you have are creations of pure imagination. You have lived through a day of them and found them turned into jokes. Most things don't matter at all. Most of your losses have been just inconveniences, but you have turned them into tragedies and lasting griefs by the grip you have had upon them."

The National Fire Protection association asserts that "a fire occurs every day in some school" in the United States. Another authority says that seventy fires occurred in the first sixty-eight days of the present year. Children are not voluntary inmates of schoolhouses. Their proper guardians have no discretion under the law, for the children of school age must go where the authorities direct. Soon after a memorable school fire disaster had destroyed 173 innocents application was made for a building permit almost to duplicate the structure which caused such frightfulness. Recently three fire horrors took place within ten days. Two were in factories and one in a school. The factory owners were promptly brought to task, as they should be. But operatives walk willingly into factory firetraps in search of wages, while, as has been said, school children have no choice. Horrors deliberately caused merit and often receive the direst punishment. Those due to carelessness, thoughtlessness or indifference are none the less cruel, yet those who are responsible are frequently allowed to make a scapegoat of "accident."

Old Fashioned Christmas.

The backlog's flame has died away;
The embers into ashes drift.
Outside the snows are [illegible], gray,
And piling fast in many a rift.
White robed is now the cedar tree
Where once the catbird nightly sang,
And from the eaves by two and three
The icicles like arrows hang.

The shadows on the somber wall
Flit, cross and dance amid the gloom,
And streaks of ghostly color fall
In changing hues about the room.
The spiders in the corners dim
Within their webs the closer cling,
And from the mantel's oaken rim
A pair of children's stockings swing.

O'er field and forest, lane and road
Fast and still faster swirl the snows,
And in the barn loft snugly stowed
A drowsy rooster wakes and crows.
The clock strikes twelve, and midnight wanes,
While winter skies stretch cold and drear.
Frost flowers blossom on the panes,
The snows float by and disappear.

Allies Determined To Retain Salonica, Says French Writer

Paris.—"Now that the Allies have announced their determination to retain Salonica as a base of operations in Macedonia," writes the brilliant military theorist Polybe in the Figaro, "we are again at Torres-Vedras, and this time on the same side of the barricade as the English."

"This same region of Salonica," writes in the Gaulois, the historian of the war of 1870, Lieutenant olonel Rousset, "is the one into which we finally must wiCthdraw with the English. It is there that new lines of Torres-Vedras will be established, resting on one side on the seo and on the other against the lakes which shut in Chalcidica."

The idea of transforming Salonica into a Torres-Vedras is not merely the desire of military experts. The work of realizating the idea already has commenced. A despatch to the Echo de Paris reports that defensive works at Salonica have been commenced.

Before Salonica the conditions for defensive strategy are ideal. The place is approachable only through a narrow pass between the mountains and the lakes on the east and the sea, commanded by the allied fleets, on the west. In that straight path a thousand may well be stopped. The three lines of Torres-Vedras defied all the strength of the French when Napoleon's power was at its apogee. The lines of Salonica will certainly withstand the efforts of Withelm the Nihilist, who is already gasping for breath and clutching at peace straws.

Everything tends to confirm the belief that the fourth act of the war, the act just beginning at Salonica, will prove another defeat for the Teutons, another defeat as striking as their defeat on the Marne, their defeat in Russia, where they have been beaten to a standstill, and their defeat in the Italian Alps, where the avalanche that will overwhelm them is gaining strength and momentum steadily.

The Balkan venture was not "willed" by Germany. It was forced on the Kaiser by his impotency to reach a decision at every other point. The Comte de Segur in his "Campagne de Russie" relates that Napoleon could only wander about asking the persons he met, "Well, what shall we do? Shall we stay where we are or shall we advance?"

"And," adds the Comte de Segur, "he did ot wait for the reply, but still kept wandering about."

PUTNIK THE SON OF A SERBIAN SCHOOLMASTER

Paris.—Field Marshal Putnik, chief of the general staff of the little Servian army, is writing a memorable page of history with his troops, outnumbered more than two to one.

Putnik is going through his sixth campaign at sixty-eight years. A semi-invalid from asthma, he is compelled to spend the greater part of the day in an overheated room and never in the midst of his troops. He is the son of a schoolmaster who left the Banat of Hungary and the Servians there and emigrated to Belgrade. The son, the field marshal, has been a soldier all his life. His ability was early recognized by the Russian agents at Belgrade, and they arranged for his education at the military academy at Petrograd, where Grand Duke Nicholas obtained his training. From the Russian capital Putnik went to France to study at the Polytechnic and St. Cyr, this last full of memories of the great Napoleon.

As soon as his education was completed and he returned to his native land he was intrusted with the reorganization of the Servian army. It is the product of his labors. He got his baptism of fire in 1876 in fighting against the Turks. In 1877 again he was campaigning against the sultan's soldiers, side by side with the Russians. In 1885 he fought with the Serbs against the Bulgars. In 1912 he was fighting the Turks with the Bulgars as allies in the first Balkan war, and at Kumanovo his gallant Serb army astonished western Europe, unacquainted with its ancient history or its modern prowess. The Turks were completely routed at Kumanovo, the Serbs, under their Crown Prince Alexander and General Bozovitch, capturing nearly 200 guns of different kinds.

In 1913 Putnik directed the Servian army which fought with the Greeks as allies against the Bulgars in the second Balkan war, and 1915 finds him struggling without hope of success for the existence of his nation against the Bulgars, aided by the soldiers of the two great Teutonic empires.

During the reign at Belgrade of King Milan, who was favorable to Austrian influence in Servia, General Putnik was deprived of his military command because he was too friendly to the Russians. When King Peter succeeded to the throne after the assassination of Milan's son, Alexander, and his consort, Queen Draga, Putnik was reinstated. During the interval he devoted himself to military studies and to the preparation of the war against Turkey which he clearly saw in Servia's ambition to extend her territory over what was in the brave days of old the Servian empire and which the sultan possessed.

He was often present at the military maneuvers in Russia, France and Germany, and from each of these armies he adopted reforms for his own. The French methods in artillery practice were introduced in Servia as well as the Schneider-Canet guns, while his infantry was armed with Mauser rifles. Speaking and reading five languages, the military history of the world was open to him, and his soldiers were drilled in tactics as good almost as the Germans'.

SEASICKNESS FROM "MOVIES"

Recalls Trip Across Atlantic When Ships on Screen Rock.

Hutchinson, Kan.—John Stevesson, farm hand at a local dairy, had to be taken to the hospital after a picture show he saw. The films were of the navy, with a number of views showing boats rolling in high seas and all that.

It was so realistic that it reminded Stevesson of his trip across the Atlantic and made him seasick.

The doctors were puzzled for quite a time to diagnose his trouble.

MOWING DOWN AN ARMY.

If an Armored Automobile Could Be Built Like a Battleship.

"The captain of the Pennsylvania will wield a weapon more intrinsically powerful than the German standing army, and his control of it will be more absolute than is the kaiser's control of that army." This surprising statement is made by Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske in Popular Science Monthly.

After comparing the fighting strength and mobility of a great battleship and an army in the field Rear Admiral Fiske says:

"Possibly the declaration may be accepted now that a battleship of 26,000 tons, such as the navies are building, with, say, twelve twelve-inch guns, is a greater example of power, under the absolute direction and control, than anything else existing, and that the main reason is the concentration of a tremendous amount of mechanical energy in a very small space, all made available by certain properties of water. Nothing like a ship can be run on shore, but if an automobile could be constructed carrying twelve twelve-inch guns, twenty-one five-inch guns and four torpedo tubes the size of the Pennsylvania's and with her armor, able to run over the land in any direction at twenty knots, propelled by engines of 20,000 horsepower, it could whip an army of 1,000,000 men just as quickly as it could get hold of its component parts. Such a machine could start at one end of an army and go through to the other like a mowing machine through a field of wheat and knock down all the buildings afterward, smash all the cars, break down all the bridges and sink all the shipping."

PRESIDENT AN DBRIDE MAKE FINAL PLANS

Washington —Overcast skies and heavy rain driven through the streets by a forty-mile-an-hour wind, marked the early hours of the wedding day of President Wilson and Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt. But the weather man held out the promise that by 8:30 o'clock this evening, the time fixed for the commencement of the ceremony, the rain will have passed off and clear, cold weather, which should continue for the major portion of the honeymoon, could be expected.

Everything was in readiness for the wedding today, although at the Galt home the old family servants who have worked for the last week almost night and day getting things ready were nervously wiping here and there with dust cloths or putting about the richly decorated rooms in an endeavor to keep busy.

Mrs. Galt, however, chatted tranquilly with her mother and sister and other members of the immediate family who are on hand for the ceremony. A goodly part of the morning and afternoon had been set aside for a visit from the President and for a final consultation regarding the wedding journey.

At the White House the President's desk was cleared of all accumulated business before he retired last night. Commissions of a number of minor postmasters in a number of sections had been signed so they could be announced as administration Christmas gifts by ambitious politicians. Secretary of State Lansing had been absolute in all matters of foreign policy and clothed with authority to act promptly in any emergency. And all other cabinet officers had been warned that, until about January 3d, the chief executive would have little time to bother about the ordinary affairs of state.

The President was declared by those closest to him in his White House family, to be as "happy as a boy" today. He arose very early and it was stated that his morning routine was unvaried. He shved as usual, glanced over the morning paper and then breakfasted with his daughters. Afterward he planned a brief conference with Secretary Lansing to go over with him the outline of the new note that is to go forward to Austria dealing with the Ancona sinking. But this conference was a mere detail as the President yesterday had authorized his premier to settle the matter him self.

CHURCHMEN OPPOSE NATIONAL DEFENCE PLAN

New York—The Church Peace Union at a meeting of the trustees of the union at the residence of Bishop David H. Greer put itself on record as being opposed to the demand for increased armament for the United States. The union wasf ounded by Andrew Carnegie and endowed by him with $2,000,000. Bishop Greer is president of the union.

The Rev. Frederick Lynch, general secretary, made public yesterday a set of resolutions adopted by the trustees. In these the trustees decided that not only should an appeal be made to the people to withstand a de- that Congress should be asked to discover how the $250,000,000 now spent annually by the United States on defence may be more effectively expended. The resolution calle on men every where to renounce the policy of armed peace.

WOMEN BELIEVES HEAD CAUSED FAMILY DEATHS

Pittsburgh.—Because her husband and son have died since the acquisition of the mummy skull of an Egyptian queen nearly 3,500 years old Mrs. Iere Bauman of 466 Neshannock avenue, Newcastle, has donated the head to the Carnegie museum.

Mrs. Bauman says she believes that the mummy worked a spell upon the members of her family, and she is hopeful that she can break this by giving the head away. Her son died four years ago, and her husband died last month.

The skull is that of Queen Hatshepsutt, or Natasu, of the line of Thothmes. It was unearthed by Mr. Bauman in September, 1909, while he and his wife were traveling in Egypt. The head weighs about five pounds and is covered with a brown black cloth, which is glued tight to the flesh. Openings in the cloth show glistening eyes, and it is believed that they are polished agates. The ears and markings of the face show distinctly.

Queen Hatshepsutt, according to Mrs. Bauman, ruled about 1578 B. C. She followed the reign of Amasis, of the eighteenth dynasty, who overthrew the Hyksos, or shepherd kings. Amasis' son Amenophis, or Amenhotep I., became the patron saint of the Theban Necropolis, Thutmosis, or Thothmes I., next to rule, penetrated into Nubia beyond the Third cataract and also into Syria as far as the Euphrates.

Queen Hatshepsutt followed her father and ruled with her brother, Thothmes II., and independently. She is characterized in history as a most energetic ruler and one accustomed to have her way.

"Tradition tells us that moving a body from its native soil and tomb will bring ruin to the holder," said Mrs. Bauman. "I did not give this much thought. I did not like the head, but my husband seemed to place no belief in the superstition.

"The eyes seemed so penetrating. They were a kind of agate and sparkled dimly out of the folds of cloth. Four years ago my son died here while my husband and I were traveling in Germany. We came home at once. This may have been a warning.

"Recently my husband was taken ill. One night while sitting in his chair he called my name, and five minutes later he was dead.

"I am through with the head—in his notes of the Egyptian trip Mr. Bauman called the head a 'treasure'—and I will feel safer with it out of my home. It seems to have worked its evil spell here."

CLIFF DWELLINGS DECAY.

Professor Nels C. Nelson, Archaeologist, Pleads For Their Preservation.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Immediate action must be taken to preserve the cliff dwellings and other ancient ruins of the southwest, according to Professor Nels C. Nelson, a widely known archaeologist, who reached here after an 800 mile journey, during which he visited ruins lying between Mesa Verde, Colo., and Zuni, N. M.

The famous Chaco canyon ruins of New Mexico are in a lamentable state of deterioration, and steps should be taken at once to prevent further decay, Professor Nelson declared. He has conducted extensive excavations in various parts of New Mexico.

CANADA PUTS AN EMBARGO ON HAY

Ottawa, Ont.—An order in council has been issued prohibiting the export of Canadian hay except to Great Britain and allied countries. There had been a great rush of hay to the United States this year, and the authorities deemed it necessary to stop this to assure an adequate supply toward the Allies' war needs.

The official announcement states: "An order in council has today been of hay to all destination abroad other than the United Kingdom, British possessions and protectorates, France, Italy, Japan and Russia (excepting Baltic ports)."

The British government recently has expressed an urgent desire that the hay in Canada be conserved in order that the needs of the expeditionary forces shall be supplied as fully as possible. It adds that every ton in Canada "will be needed for the Empire's use," and expresses the view that the embargo will not materially affect the price the farmer would receive.

METROPOLITAN CHAFFEURS UNDERGO POLICE INQUIRY

New York—Within the next few days every chauffeur in New York city will be required to submit to a course of inquiry by the police. Armed with lists of automobile and motor truck drivers in the districts embraced by theb rasch detective bureaus, strong details of detectives will begin the work this morning in all five boroughs. The personal character, qualifications and history of each and every chauffeur in the city will card index prepared and kept at Police Headquarters for future reference.

To the men assigned to the work were issued late last night the lists of chauffeurs resident in the several districts. The work will be systemaized and completed with despatch. The system of tabulation will simplify to a considerable degree the police traffic supervision, and policemen on post will be enabled to identify and locate within a brief time through headquarters any driver of a car who is guilty of an infraction of the law.

The natural beauties of FULTON are so many and so great that it is almost shocking to think that they have not been taken care of better. You cannot expect Nature to do everything for you; you have to return the compliment and keep the things given to you FREE OF CHARGE, in good shape.

Upon receipt of your CO-OPERATION, that faithful servant FULTON, will deliver to you FREE OF CHARGE, . . . PROSPERITY . . . HAPPINESS . . . HEALTH.

Home is one of the most beautiful words in any language. The rich and the poor; the healthy and the sick; the fortunate and the unfortunate; the educated and the uneducated; the child and the adult. all are longing for HOME; especially during the holiday season. That little word has something magnetic about it that cannot be described. We are all like to be HOME; we love it; we decorate it; we are proud of it and will defend it with the last drop of blood that's in us. Is it then not true that HOME TRADING should be defended by every man, woman and child in FULTON?

You indifferent Citizen, take notice of the following:

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself as "he" instead of "I."
Pick flaws; find fault; forget the man is "you,"
And strive to make your estimate ring true.
The faults of others then will dwarf and shrink,
Love's chain grow stronger by one mighty link.
When "you" and "he" as substitute for "I"
Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

If you want to be a MASTER MAN; A MASTER WOMAN; A MASTER CHILD then do not forget that there are others living besides yourself; that these others have just as much a right to live as you; and that by helping EACH OTHER and by WORKING TOGETHER, you will ALL benefit.

* * *

If you do not get in line to make FULTON, better, bigger, more prosperous, then you are OBSTRUCTING THE WHEELS OF PROGRESS and you may be run over.

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce is an institution for ALL HE PEOPLE IN FULTON; not for a FEW. The organization is working to make OUR city better and we therefore ask your co-operation. Do you think that we are asking too much? What's there in life, if we can't see that it is essential that we assist each other. The ONE MAN POWER does not go any more in these MODERN times. That was all right in Nero's, Julius Ceasar's, Alexander's or Napoleon's time, but not in this great Country of Liberty, in this great Country of diversified humanity.

Say "Hello" to your fellow citizen; shake his hand and talk to him. There's nothing greater in this world than that friendly word. We citizens of FULTON should be ONE GREAT FAMILY. We should stand together as solid as a rock in mid-ocean and then . . . . we ALL will benefit.

How would you like it, if something great happened here, so that FULTON would be on the tongue of everybody? Would you not be proud to be able to say: "I AM FROM FULTON." Now, if we can get together that will happen, as sure as your living. But please remember "United we stand; divided we fall."

* * *

Let's all come out on Wednesday evening for the CHRISTMAS TREE ceremonies. Let us show the other fellow that it is a LIE that the people in FULTON are divided.

MUSICAL FIVE JOIN FORCES

Messrs. Newton, Guernsey, Crowe, Adkins and Richardson to Be Heard in Other Cities.

As a result of the success with which their act met with in the recent Elks' Minstrel show, the Messrs. Newton, Guernsey, Crowe, Adkins and Richardson, termed the Musical Monarchs in the Elks Minstrel program have completed arrangements for continuing the act and staging it in several nearby cities.

At present Mr. Jess F. Newton, who heads the quintet, is arranging to appear in several vandeville theatres. An engagment booked at the Richardson Theater in Oswego will be filled shortly after the holidays.

The vandeville and show idea is not new to any of the men as they have all had considerable experience in displaying their ability with the various musical instruments before large audiences.

Mr. Newton plays with the Elks' Orchestra and he can play practically all of the wind instruments, the trombone, baritone, ballard, horn, etc., all of which instruments he played in the minstrel show. Mr. Newton has travelled the entire Keith circuit.

L. A. Richardson, who plays the bass cello, has been a member of the famous Conway's band, one of the leading travelling bands of the world.

Bert Adkins, Mayor Lewis's appointee to the position of City Chamberlain operates the drum instruments chimes, xylophone, etc. Mr. Adkins, together with a brother, have had experience in vandeville work. His work with the drum is considered excellent.

Andrew Crowe, cornet player, whose occupation when he is not engaged in musical activities, is that of civil engineering, is from Troy and he has been a member of Doring's band.

Arthur Guernsey is connected with the Citizens' band and the Elks' band. [illegible]

A photograph of the quintet was taken yesterday. The men plan to make the new organization a permanent one. Although playing instruments of the same family, the men have never been gathered together for a concert. Their appearance in the minstrel show was their first in a body and their act was very well received. The men are all members of the Elks' band.

SOCIALISTS WANT FRANCE TO CONTINUE THE WAR

Paris—The socialists of Paris and of this district met in private session yesterday and, it is reported, voted almost unanimously that France should pursue the war so as to render the defeat of imperialism in Germany more effectve, as the resolution put it, and peace more durable. The resolution is said to have provided also that the renewal of socialist international relations could only be considered when the German minority had completely separated itself from the German social democracy. It is stated that the vote was 6,000 in favor of the resolution and 100 against it.

Turko-German Advance Begins Into Egypt and Gateway to India

London—Events are moviing with great rapidity in the Eastern Mediterranean littoral, where the Germans and Turks are concentrating for an invasion of Egypt and a bid for control of the Suez Canal and the gateway to India.

The Turko-German command is scouring Asia Minor for droves of camels for transport purposes to supplement the railway that has been built almost to the Egyptian frontier.

London military writers who know Egypt, however, predict that no matter how thoroughly preparations are made for an advance on Suez the enterprise by the very nature of the country is doomed to failure.

Napoleon's Rapid March

On the other hand, the experience of the French army in Syria in 1799 is referred to in military circles as establishing the ability of the German to transport troops and supplies from Damascus to the vicinity of the canal in less than a fortnight. This time estimate assumes that the Allies will not attempt to oppose the invading forces in the desert country.

Napoleon's army of 10,000 men made the march in January, 1799, from Cairo across the desert to El Aush in five days, and El Ansh was carried by assault at midnight of the fifth day The French made o forced march, the troops suffering great hardship. [illegible] reported.

The French advance from Egypt into Syria waso ccasioned by information that the Turks were congregating a strong force at Rhodes for a descent on Egypt. The French war fleet had been destroyed at Aboukir Bay and the force under Napoleon found itself much in the same position that a German army would be in today if massed in Syria, that is to say, unsupported by a fleet. The British, in 1799 as now, controlled the sea. It was Napoleon's intention to attack the Turks in Syria, unite the Christian population in Asia Minor under his standards and from Damacus make a straight line of it to the Euphrates, thereby threatening India.

In no other way could he hope to strike a blow at the British. The situation in this respect, it is argued, bears a remarkable resemblance to them ilitary problem of the Germans of today. The difference is that the German proposed advance is in the opposite direction to that taken by Napoleon. It is not doubted that the German plan is to threaten India, and that the contemplated attack on the Suez line of communications is a means to this end. In the Napoleonic campaign the French were opposed by the Turks and English. In the present situation the British and French are opposed by the Germans and Turks. The British have the ability today, it is believed, to secure the aid of the Christians of Asia Minor as soon as it is possible to provide that portion of the population with arms and ammbunition, but this provisioning cannot be effected until the Allies have secured a firm footing on the Syrian coast. This foothold may be obtained, it is thought, either as a consequence of a German reverse in the operations before the Suez or in seizure of one of the Syrian ports by an allied fleet.

French March Across Desert

When Napoleon carried El Ansh, in January, 1799, he immediately pushed on to the eastward, pursuing a route which carried his forces through a dry, barren land. After traversing a desert one hundred and fifty miles across the country gradually changed in aspect, becoming fertile and watered by rainfalls. A march of a few days from El Ansh brought the French to Gaza. In one hour's fighting a Turkish division was dispersed, and Gaza fell.

To oppose Napoleon's advance an army of 30,000 Turks was concentrated at Damsacus and an allied fleet was hovering on the coast. On March 3, or twenty-three days after leaving Cairo, the French arrived at Jaffa. This port wass trongly garrisoned and surrounded by a massive wall. Up to this time the French were provided with only field guns. An artillery train had been despatched by several small vessels from Alexandria, but these vessels were captured by English cruisers. The French therefore were compelled to carry Jaffa by assault without the aid of battering pieces. The fighting in the streets of Jaffa was of indescribable fury. More than 2,000 Turkish prisoners who had the capture of Gaza were taken in arms at Jaffa. This entire force was taken out among the sand hills and shot by the French.

From Joppa Napoleon marched on Acre, them ost important military post in Syria. The defence of Acre was taken over by Sir Sydney Smith, commander of the British fleet. The British succeeded in reaching Acre 2 days ahead of the French. The fighting at Acre was of the severest character. During the siege the Turks appeared in force, but with af orce of 6,000 men Napoleon defeated a Turkish army of 30,000 at Mount Taber. While the engagement was taking place a force of 2,000 rench kept the garrison at Acre in check. Napoleon had expected to receive forty-four guns were captured by British war shops. A desperate assault on Aere by the French failed and with the plague raging among the troops Napoleon was compelled to withdraw and abondon the Syrian campaign. The route he followed on his return to Egypt was the same which the Germans now propose to use in advancing on the Suez.

Long Siege of Acre

[illegible] to Constantinople and India. He declared afterward that had he been successful in carrying the place he would have obtained there arms for 300,000 men, and with these arms he would have equipped the inhabitants of Syria, who were anxious to be free from the Mussulman yoke.

The siege of Acre continued for sixty days and the French lost before the place 3,000 men by the sword and plague. The reinforcing of Acre at the end of the siege of 12,000 fresh Turkish troops was the cause of the failure of the final assault. The French attempted to carry the place before these reinforcements got into the city, but the garrison held out sufficiently long to allow aid to reach the city. As soon as the juncture was effected the French withdrew.

At St. Helena, twenty years later, Napoleon said:—"Acre once taken, the Frenc army would have flown to Aleppo and Damsacus. In the twinkling of an eye it would have been on the Euphrates. The Christians of Syria, the Druses, the Christians of Armenia would have joined it. The whole population ofthe East would have been agitated."

Napoleon believed hew ould have been reinforced by 600,000 men from the Eastern nations, that he would have reached Constantinople and India, and that he would have changed the political face of the world. Napoleon always declared the sole cause of his failure at Acre was due to Sir Sidney Smith taking all his battering train which was on board several small vessels. "Had it not been for that," he declared, "I should have taken Acre in spite of him."

Acre was left on May 20, and early in July the French army again was in Cairo.

The entire Syrian campaign, which included the capture of El Ansh, Gaza, Jaffa and the sixty days' siege of Acre, was approximately of six months' duration.

GRANGERS URGE RURAL GUARD

They Unite With City Men in Asking for Police Protection of State's Highways

New York—In the interest of farmers, suburbanites and villagers throughout this state who demand proper police protection, the committee for a State Police announced today from its headquarters in this city, that it would frame, introduce and support at Albany next month legislation providing fo rthe patrol of rural and suburban sections by a state police force, similar to that which has protected the people of Pennsylvania for the last ten years. By supplementing in the outlying districts the splendid work performed by the police force of this and every other city in the state, the leaders in this new movement for rural protection believe that the residents of the remote sections may enjoy just as efficient a defence against crime as the citizens of the well-policed cities. In saving for the state much money heretofore required for milita, conservation, county and other public activities completely covered by the state police, it is calculated that the proposed law establishing this rural force outside the communities will result in real economy as well as protection to the taxpayers.

With W. N. Giles of Skaneateles, secretary of the New York State Grange, serving on the executive committee of the Committee for a State Police and Arthur Woods, police commissioner of this city, endorsing the project, leaders of this organization now believe that a united demand by thef armers of the state for the protection of the proposed rural police will be supplemented by the support of the city police forces, [illegible] official support of this proposition has been received from granges and local protective associations in various parts of the state as well as from police, militia and prosecuting officers, who realize its urgent necessity. Acting as a net to catch criminals driven outside the limits of all the cities of the state by efficient local police, the proposed mounted police can not only guard the lives and property of the residents of every rural region but can indirectly increase the safety of city dwellers, it is pointed out.

Calling for a force of mounted men, just large enough to property patrol the open country and absolutely removed from political influence under strict military supervision, a bill creating the proposed rural police is today being drawn by leaders of this new movement. Following the actual working out of a similar state police protective plan in Pennsylvania, it is intended that every man, woman and child living in the country sections of the state shall be kept in touch with the mounted policemen by regular patrol of all the roads and telephone connections at sentry stations. In thes aving of sheriffs' and militia expenses, forest fish and game guard and road inspection, as well as in the prevention of loss of property to the more remote citizens of the state, it is estimated that the establishment of such a rural police would work for economy rather than add to the state's expenses.

MILLER BEARDSLEY HURT IN RUNAWAY ACCIDENT

The upper Broadway bridge was the scene of a sensational runaway today when a team of horses belonging to the Sharp Ice company. After the sleigh to which they were attached had tipped the driver out, dashed across the river and into a pole at the postoffice corner where the impact of the vehicle threw the team to the ground Several bystanders grabbed the horses before they could contiue their dash.

The horses took fright when the sleigh caught in the trolley tracks at the corner of Broadway and West 1st st. The driver, Miller Beardsley, was thrown to the ground as the sleigh tipped over and he suffered a severe injury to one of his arms.

BOY OF NINE YEARS DONATES PRAYER BOOK

The spirit and free will of a child is shown in nine year old Barnett Levy, son of Sam Levy, of 4th st, who without having the idea suggested to him accumulated a sum of money sufficient to purchase a prayer book and donated the book to the newly formed Jewish synagogue.

The lad had saved thirty-eight cents and the deficiency was supplied by his mother and others who were not aware of the child's purpose until the actual purchasing of the gift had been made.

THE OLD SCHOOLHOUSE

At the recent convocation of the university of the State of New York held in Albany, Hamlin Garland, the writer, speaker and novelist, was one of the principal orators of the occasion Mr. Garland has a nation-wide reputation as an author and speaker and his address was interesting and instructive. Among other things he called attention to the changes which have taken place in this country during the past few years and pointed out the improved educational facilities of the country. In speaking of the old schoolhouse of a former time, in the old days Mr. Garland said:

"Now in the midst of these rude, scattered homesteads, the district school house, bare as a tombstone stood at the intersection of the lanes. It has two front dors, three windows on a side and a chimney at the back. The windows were uncurtained and the seats of pine were painted an ugly, slaty blue. The walls were rough plaster. A big wood stove stood in the middle of a puddle of bricks, and at night the room was lit by kerosene lamps set in brackets nailed to the window cases —not one patch of refined color, not one touch or line of grace or hint of beauty relieved the ugliness of this primitive structure. It was cold in winter, hot in summer, and hideous all the time. And yet there are thousands of such shacks still standing not only in the West but in the East and South — buildings which formed the only social centers of the districts, the one and only possession of surrounding farms. In such a place we not only studied history and mathematics; we took part in singing schools and spelling bees and political meetings. It was our church, our district hall, and once or twice it became our neighborhood theater. The dads of the district were always talking about some time planting trees aout it, but they never did, and when I visited it for the last time 3 years ago it still stood without the shadow of a tree or the tracery of a vine. Many of the old farm-houses were bowered in maples and elms and some had lovely lawns and gardens, but the schoolhouse was just as ugly and as bare as when I, a tousel-headed boy, pounded my chilblained heels against the scarred and woody desks." — Lyons Republican.

DECLINE IN SHEEP RAISING

At a meeting of agriculturalists at Albany, Dr. V. A. Moore, a veterinarian, declared that if New York is ever to regain her place as a wool producing State, something must be done to protect the farmer whose sheep are killed by dogs.

The fact is that New York will never regain her position as a sheep raising State. This phase of agriculture is essentially one of pioneer sections. Wool and sheep were profitable until transportation facilities developed and population grew, and then other forms of agriculture became more profitable. That is the reason that sheep raising and wool growing has been declining for years throughout the United States, even though enormous protective duties were charged in the endeavor to maintain the industry. In this part of the State dairying and other forms of agriculture became more profitable than wool growing. In the west the raising of wheat and other crops proved more profitable than sheep.

In the British Islands there has been some decline in sheep raising, but it has not been as great as the decline in parts of the United States. That is because of the fondness of the Briton for mutton.

However, there is no doubt that dogs have contributed to the decline in the number of sheep in New York. Many farmers have lands suitable to the raising of sheep, and would have a flock of sheep but for the certain destruction by dogs.—Utica Observer

DEMONSTRATE THE RETURNS

Under the heading "Aims of Agricultural Clubs," the weekly news letter issued by the Department of Agriculture objects to be attained through the promotion of boys' agricultural clubs. Of the ten reasons No. 5 is "To dignify and magnify the vocation of the farmer by demonstrating the returns which may be secured from farming when it is properly conducted."

Right there is the rub of most business situations where young men are concerned. The returns should be demonstrated. Frequently we hear complaints from fathers because their sons fail to take up the work which the parent before many years is sure to lay aside. Young men choose a profession while their fathers plod along in business, or young men dive into the business whirlpool while fathers continue their professions.

If you will analyze one of these cases some time you will likely find that failure to demonstrate returns is a chief cause for son not seeing the situation as does father. A father can hardly expect a son to be loyal to the old stand when the returns are held a secret.

The lad who is told just what his father's business will pay, if he does ther ight thing, will have a better chance to make a wise decision than he possibly could under opposite circumstances.—Batavia News.

GETTING OUT OF THE TRENCHES

So much is being written and said these days about Thrift and the man who spends his money, time and energy at the brass rail and the round table, that suggestions as to what men should do with spare time and money are always in order.

In all of the talks upon Thrift that one may read the keynote is apparent—It is the small things that count, and more than this, trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle.

A lot ha been printed in this column about the desirability of having a savings and loan association in Fulton—an institution that would provide an easy way to save money and enable many of the men who are making the farms surrounding Fulton into factories grow independent. We are quite apt to condole with the farmer upon this or that subject or to wish him well, and then dismiss the matter. We may say he is brave, forgetting that the trenches are filled with brave men, but we do not follow the example of Henry Ford in trying to get the brave men out of the trenches.

It has been pointed out by men interested in the general development of Fulton that a savings and loan association would and could do a lot toward increasing the city's stability.

There is nothing new in the suggestion, and for the enlightenment of our readers we are reprinting a few of the remarks made by Mr. C. W. Holmes, president of the New York State League of Savings and Loan Associatioons, who says in part:

"The Savings and Loan Association is built upon the accumulation of small savings, and has been the keynote of victory to many a struggling warrior in the great battle of life. Its purpose in the beginning was to enable the wage earner to convert rents into a house and make him the landlord instead of the tenant.

"The city which has the largest percentage of its citizens owners of their homes is possessed of the most stable population. The home is the cradle of a nation's destiny. The motto of the Savings and Loan Association is 'The American home, the safeguard of American Liberty.'

"There are 6,600 associations in the central states, mostly represented in thirty-three states: over three million members, with savings of one billion three hundred and fifty million dollars. Last year one hundred and ten million dollars were saved, and over a quarter of a million new members secured. The State of Pennsylvania leads with 1,700 associations, of which Philadelphia claims over 600. One hundred and fifty thousand homes in Philadelphia have been paid for by the help of these associations. New York is sixth in the list, with 245 associations, 175,000 members and over seventy millions saved. Last year 10,000 new members were added to the list, and over four million dollars added to the savings."

It is regretted that Mr. Holmes does not tell us why New York occupies sixth place in the list of states having associations, but whatever they are they must nail to be good ones. In the work before us of placing Fulton on the map as a "great Industrial and Civic Center of the Empire State," as the Chamber of Commerce is desirous of doing, wouldn't it be a good plan to include in the itinerary at least one step in advance of our present facilities for community building by adding a savings and loan association?

WHEN DID PRAYER BECOME "MEDICINE?"

A man named W. John Muray has been arrested upon a charge. The facts are these:

Thef acts are these.

Murray is pastor of a group of persons calling themselves the Church of the Healing Christ.

He prays for the sick. He takes fees for praying.

That is the testimony upon which Murray has been arrested and will be tried.

We hold no brief for Murray. He may be an honest man or he may be a confidence operator. We do not know anything about him. But we do know that to arrest any man upon such testimony is a ridiculous and an unconstitutional proceeding.

The information is ridiculous because it charges the man with practising medicine by means of prayer.

It would be interesting to learn when prayer became a drug or a lotion or a plaster. What pharmacies keep it in stock. Is it a decoction, an infusion or a distillation? Is it compounded in liquid or dry form? Does the druggist sell this "medicine" in a bottle or neatly done up as a tablet or a pill?

If prayer is not a "medicine" how can a man practise medicine by praying?

And since freedom of faith is one of the fundamental guarantees of the Constitution itself, what power is there in a statute of the State of New York to forbid the exercise of religious faith, so long as there is no infringement upon private rights or public security in that exercise?

Does the offense consist in taking pay for praying?

Well, then, every clergyman in New York State is an offender. Twice an offender, in fact, because they both preach and pray for pay. And to go further, they not only pray for the living, for for the dead—and take pay for the prayers.

The man Murray is nothing to us. But he becomes of interest because he happens to be the victim of an assault, under forms of law, upon all that makes laws desirable and respectable, which is the guarantee of orderly personal, political and religious liberty.—N. Y. American.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY MEETS

Rochester the Place, and January the Month for Fruit Growers' 61st Annual Session.

Fruit growers of the state, and of Western New York in particular look forward about this time to the large and enthusiastic meetings of the old Western New York Horticultural Society, which are held in Convention Hall, Rochester, in the first month of each year. January 26th, 27, and 28 are thed ates announced for the sixty-first annual meeting of the organization.

The program, which will shortly be mailed will contain the names of some practical fruit men of national fame, as well as some with a more local reputation. Some new features will be introduced, especially in the popular round-table gatherings.

Next to the program is the mammoth fruit exhibit, which will excel all former efforts. While it is true that this year's apple crop was below the average it also is true that what fruit there was was of superior quality. The opportunity is afforded to those who have fruit to enter it in competition fo rthe liberal cash and other prizes offered.

For the best barrel of greenings, Baldwins and Northern Spies, prizes of ten dollars and five dollars; for the best box of each of nine specified varieties of applas, five dollars and three dollars (making nine firsts and nine seconds); for the largest and best collection of varieties, ten dollars and five dollars; also cash prizes for smaller collections and for single plates. There will also be cash prizes for displays of pears, grapes, nuts, vegetables and for parcel-post packages, while thew ives and daughters of members are offered attractive cash premiums for exhibits of canned fruits and jellies.

As an echo of apple day, the International Apple Shippers' Association, appreciating theg reat success of Western New York's celebration of the day, has presented to the Western New York Horticultural Society, a sterling silver cup to be offered for the best collection of not less than three barrels of the same or different varieties of apples, packed under the New York State Packing Law. Competition is open to any one in New York state for fruit grown in the state. These inducements are expected to bring together a fruit exhibit of great size.

Convention Hall is regarded as an ideal place for holding the convention. The building is in the city's center, with hestaurants of all grades close at hand. Moreover the hall, which recently has been newly painted and decorated and equipped with an entirely new system of electric lighting, covers under one roof the meeting and the extensive display of spraying apparatus, spraying chemicals, fruit, mechanical graders, elaborate instructive displays of insect and fungous enemies of the fruit-grower by the Geneva Experiment Station and the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell University. The fruit display made by the Geneva station will be supplemented by an almost equally large contribution from a county association.

The secretary-treasurer, John Hall, room 204 Granite Building, Rochester N. Y., will welcome all applicants for further information and for copies of the program.

LITTLE GIRL INVITES SANTA TO LUNCH

Two little girls made a call bright and early at The Times office this morning, each bearing a letter full of instructions to Old Chris. Both received enlightening information regarding Chris' advance man and then they departed giggling. As little girls often giggle, no conjectures were drawn.

The letters left for the advance man were as follows:

Dear Santa:

Will you please bring me a flexible flyer, a dolls cutter, and a baby doll.

Please put my presents on the Xmas tree. In the dinning room you will find some bred and buter.

Please bring Edith a sled too. I am a good girl. Be sure and come. Wishing you a Merry Xmas, with love,

HILDA.

P. S. Be sure and don't pass our house without stopping. Bring me as much as you can.

Dear Santa:

Will you please bring me a doll's cutter and a sled for myself. I want a doll's wedding veil and a doll's dress. I want a trunk to keep my doll's clothes in. I want a kitchen cabinet and a doll's dresser, what I never have had before, and a snow shovel if you can share them.

If you can spare them I wish you could bring some fruit and nuts.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. With love, EDITH.

P. S. I am six years old.

PICTURESQUE COSTUMES IN O'HARA'S PLAY

'Kilkenny'' is the title of Fiske O'Hara's new play, from the pen of Augustus Pitou, Sr. It is said to be the best Irish play that Mr. Pitou has yet written. Mr. O'Hara will sing five new songs during the course of the play. "That's What An Irishman Means," "Contrary Mary Clary," "Ireland is Ireland to Me," "Dear Mother Mine," and "When It's Moonlight in Mayo." The scenes of the play are laid in Kilkenny, during the Kilkenny Carnival, in 1810, affording opportunity for the wearing of picturesque costumes.

FULL ORCHESTRA EVENINGS

WEATHER FAVORS LINES OF TRADE

Dun's Review of Saturday says:

Temporary restriction of operations resulted from the storm, which for a time hampered wire and transportation service and aggravated the congestion of freight Needed deliveries were further retarded and the strength of certain commodities accentuated, while outdoor work in the East and Great Lakes region was partially suspended. Considerable benefit, however, accrued from the snowfall and lower temperatures, additional stimulus being imparted to the distribution of heavyweight apparel, footwear and fuel. In contrast t othe usual experience at this season there is no general lull apparent in the commercial world. December, with its preparations for inventorying, is, ordinarily, a month of diminishing activity, except for the holiday tradeffi yet in the present instance the tendency is steadily toward expension rather than contraction. This fact is made clear not only by the tenor of advices from all leading centers, but also by the statistics of bank exchanges, which meas sure business volumes. Thus, clearings at the principal cities this week were 64.0 per cent. in excess of last year's, and 39.6 per cent. larger than in 1913, while payments outside of Neew York showed gains of 29.4 and 20.5 per cent., respectively. Moreover, other barometers reflect the same trend, gross earnings of railroads reporting for the first week of December disclosing an increase of 16.6 per cent. over 1914, and it is significant of the remarkable improvement in thep osition of the transporting companies that these interests continue to make provision for needed equipment and extensions. In view of the frequent complaints of shortage of rolling stock, however, the accumulation of about 38,000 in the number of idle freight cars last month is considered surprising. Further light on the enormous traffic movements is shed by the most recent returns of foreign commerce, merchandise exports from the thirteen principal customs districts last week being valued at fully $98,400,000—a total only slightly below the high record attained in the third week of October. Itmight logically be inferred that the scarcity of vessels would curtail the oversea shipments, yet, in spite of all obstacles, these continue in extraordinary volume and emphasize the magnitude and urgency of the European requirements. Though the latter, as is a matter of common knowledge, started the wheels of progress in this country, the Government crop report emphasizes the more solid foundation on which the business boom rests. Briefly, it has been a year of wonderful agricultural achievements, with the yield of wheat exceeding a billion bushels for the first time in history and the combined value of the grain harvests reaching a figure never before attained.

RURAL SCHOOL GETS BLAME

Senator Wadsworth Says Drift of Young People to Cities is Result of Lagging

The future of the United States is dependent upon them aintenance of a great agricultural population spread as evenly as possible over the country, Senator James W. Wadsworth, jr. of New York told the Association of Life Insurance Presidents in convention at New York.

Senator Wadsworth said the steady drift of boys and girls from the farm to the city formed a serious obstacle to them aintenance of such an agricultural population, and declared the failure of thec ountry school to "keep up with the education al procession" was the chief reason for the movement from the country to the city.

"I believe that the next great organized effort for the advancement of agriculture and the preservation of thriving and contented country population," said Senator Wadsworth, "must be directed toward the upbuilding of the country school. Work of this sort is in line with the highest purpose of government and upon its successful accomplishment must rest the continued success of our wonderful experiment in democracy.

Aim to Increase Prosperity

"I am of the opinion that the cumulative effect of the efforts being put forth for the advancement of agriculture will retard and perhaps do away with the depopulation of the country districts. Virtually all of these efforts aim toward increasing the material prosperity of the farmer and firmly standardizing his business. This is the dollars and cents side of the life. But the farmer and his wife and their children are intensely ambitious, and for this reason the little country schoolhouse must meet their requirements."

Senator Wadsworth said that the tendency of the people to gather in the large cities presented one of the greatest problems in thec ountry today. He declared that human beings were unable to attain their highest development in an atmosphere lacking in "elbow room." The senator explained that masses of people living in close confinement seriously complicated the administration of a democracy, chiefly because people in large masses usually lost or buried their individuality asc itizens.

While Senator Wadsworth admitted that the large cities were an outgrowth of more or less natural conditions, and stated that he did not advocate an entire abandonment of the present industrial system and mode of life, he declared that the highest duty of a statesman today is to devise safe and intelligent means for modifying these conditions and equalizing the distribution of population so as to perpetuate the republic in a high state of economic efficiency. He declared that the farmer served as a strong and unswerving balance wheel which kept straight and true the vision of all the people.

The senator said that while the hazards of farming and stock raising in past years drove large numbers of men from these pursuits, the hazards of agriculture have now been so great ly reduced that it was exceedingly rare to hear of whole states, or even whole districts, suffering entire crop losses or being unproductive.

In connection with the betterment of actual farming conditions, Senator Wadsworth praised the work which has been done and is being done by the Federal and State Agricultural Departments. He said the various departments had taught the farmer "not to put all his eggs in one basket," which resulted in a great diversity of crops. The senator said that in the Genesee valley in New York, where he lives, the variety of crops raised more than doubled the past twenty years.

In accordance with an order made by the Public Service Commission, Second District, thep roposed advance in passenger rates on railroads in the state which was to have been made January 1, will not become effective until April 11, at least, the commission having suspended the increase until that time.

The new tariffs which all of the roads in the state intended to put into operation the first of the new year may not be allowed to become effective even Apriy 1, for when the commission suspended their operation, a hearing was also ordered for the purpose of determining whether the new increased rates are reasonable.

No definite dates for the hearings have been set, but the commission announced that they would be held as soon as the representatives of the railroads and the various civic bodies who have protested against the increase could prepare their cases and come before the commission for argument.

The Old Year Out and the New Year In

By EDITH V. ROSS

The celebration of New Year's day in New York has necessarily changed with the people who celebrate it. It was transplanted to New Amsterdam from Holland when a few houses clustered about the fort and every person in the village knew every other person. That was a fit community for making calls. When the people of New York had grown from hundreds to millions the custom broke down of its own weight.

How far back dates the custom of seeing the old year out and the new year in is not known. Certain it is that one night in New Amsterdam—Dec. 31—Hendrick, the watch, after calling the hour "Twelve o'clock and all's well," turned to walk to the next corner to repeat the announcement, when he saw the house of Killian van Gansback in a blaze of illumination from fully a dozen wax candles. Hammering with the great iron knocker, the upper half of the door was opened, and he saw a number of Dutch girls in many petticoats and young men in many pairs of breeches raising pewter mugs to drink in Holland gin to St. Nicholas, the patron saint of the town, "May he grant us a prosperous year!"

"What means this invasion of the night when all good citizens should be sound asleep in bed?" he cried. "Disperse!"

The moment it was noticed that the intruder upon the festivities was the watch every light was blown out and there was a scattering of the revelers. Bolts were shot, and in a few minutes the rooms on the ground floor were locked and the great front door was barred.

At that time Katrina Van Gansback was at a marriageable age, and her father had decided to wed her to old Dedrick Beekman, more than twice as old as she. Her mother was dead, and she had been brought up under the care of her aunt, Anneke Ten Eyck, a spinster of fifty. During the festivities on that eventful night the aunt drew Beekman into a side room for the purpose of arranging the settlement he was to make upon her niece and to appoint a day for the wedding.

Katrina was not only opposed to marrying old Beekman, but had a lover in young Wouter Ten Broeck, and the young couple were at their wits' end to find a way to defeat Anneke Ten Eyck's plan for marrying Katrina to Beekman. During the evening of the old-new year conviviality Katrina stood at the door listening to the arrangements that were being made to dispose of her. The moment the company were gone and the lights were put out she turned the key on her aunt and Beekman and led her father, who was feeble, up to his room and put him to bed.

A loud knocking came from below, but as the only persons in the house, except the couple locked in below, were Katrina and her father, and the latter was deaf as the stone steps in front of the house, their ability to get out depended solely on Katrina. When she had seen her father in bed and well covered, especially about the ears, she went out, closing the door behind her, and descended to the room where the prisoners were still hammering to be freed.

"Who's there?" asked the minx, pretending ignorance.

"Your Aunt Anneke. Let me out at once."

"Any one else?"

"Yes; Meinheer Beekman is in here with me."

"Oh, auntie, what a talk this will cause!"

"No scandal at all unless you blab."

"My keeping the secret will do no good. You and Meinheer Beekman must be married."

"Nonsense! There's no need of the matter getting out."

"I don't want to marry Meinheer Beekman, and I do want to marry Wouter Ten Broek."

There was no reply to this for some time. Evidently the parties within were consulting as to what it was best to do. Whether the woman refused to marry the man or the man refused to marry the woman was never known. At any rate, after a conference the aunt returned to the attack, or, rather, persuasion, telling her niece of the advantages she would enjoy as the wife of Meinheer Beekman, who was the largest dealer in pelts in New Amsterdam.

But Katrina was not to be persuaded, and her aunt was at last obliged to consent to her terms. No written pledge was required, for Katrina needed only to tell the story to set the tongues of the town wagging about her aunt and Meinheer Beekman.

As soon as an agreement was reached Katrina unlocked the door, and Meinheer Beekman, taking down the bars to the front door, stole away in the darkness. The next day the betrothal of Katrina and Wouter Ten Broek was announced.

Katrina kept the secret till after her aunt had been dead some years, then told it to her daughter, who was about to be married. The daughter handed it down, and it is preserved in the archives of the family to this very day.

However, the story does not prove that the Dutchmen of New Amsterdam were in the habit of seeing the old year out and the new year in, else the watch would not have broken up the party.

BUSINESS OF A COMMUNITY.

Business must have a human basis, says Don E. Mowry in the Town Development Magazine. The grade of a business depends upon the grade of its human background. To build up the humanity of a community is therefore the surest way of building up the business of a community. We must analyze carefully the local needs, always taking into account in mapping out the program that undue emphasis must not be placed upon any special activity for any length of time. We must recognize two primary functions, those which are civic and those which are primarily commercial. If undue emphasis is placed upon the civic program the commercial interests will have just cause for complaint of the methods which the commercial organization—the central organization—is employing in the interests of the community in which every one is playing and paying his part.

ORNAMENTAL ELECTROLIER.

Santa Cruz, Cal., Has a Type That Is Attractive and Economical.

When the need for ornamental street lighting in the city of Santa Cruz, Cal., became recognized it was suggested that an inexpensive electrolier could be installed on the main street of the city by sharing the expense equally between property owners and tenants, writes Fred R. Howe, mayor of Santa Cruz, in the American City. It was found that the people were unwilling to pay the price of some of the higher grade types manufactured, and it was therefore decided to make an electrolier of much cheaper design, using black iron pipe with screw joints. After considerable study the design herewith reproduced was adopted.

The electrolier is so constructed that if in the future a more attractive cast iron upright standard is desired it will be necessary only to remove the crossarm at the top and set the new standard over the remaining pipe. The underground work is first class and will require no further expense.

This type of electrolier has been in service in Santa Cruz for five years and has been so much admired that the Southern Pacific Railroad company has adopted it and is now installing it in the depots between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Three openings are cut in the four inch by eight foot length. One of these is cut six inches above the sidewalk and is made 4 by 6 inches, with a cover 6 by 8 inches which is screwed to the pipe, and this opening is used to connect the electrolier to the underground wires. The other two openings are placed from two to eighteen inches below the sidewalk, according to the position of the underground work—whether it is to be placed on top of the sidewalk or below the gutter line in the street. These lower openings measure 1½ by 6 inches and are used for the introduction of the conduit. The electrolier is placed three feet in the ground and concreted in with a mixture of 5.1.

The underground conduit costs about 6 cents per foot, the cost being governed by the size of the job. Repairing sidewalk and streets costs from 11 to 15 cents per square foot. The approximate cost of the electrolier complete, set up and ready for operation, is from $30 to $32, according to the size of the job and the kind of street. The cost of operating these electroliers is $1 per month for 120 watts on all night and every night service, 1 1-9 cents per light per night, or .025 per kilowatt hour.

City Electrician J. C. Geyer reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, 245 of these electroliers were installed throughout the city, containing 679 forty-watt lamps, using approximately 27.2 kilowatts per hour, or 8,148 kilowatts per month, at a cost of $194 per month.

Course of Civic Lectures.

One of the plans of the Hazleton (Pa.) chamber of commerce for the coming winter is the holding of a course of lectures designed to aid in the upbuilding of the business affairs of the city. Speakers for this purpose will be obtained from the bureau of commercial economics at Washington.

He Showed Them How to Do It

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

During the latter part of the last century a great deal of whisky was distilled in the Tennessee mountains on which no tax was paid. One day a man appeared among the government officials who were endeavoring to hunt down a man named Hardwick, who had been for some time running a still concealed in the mountains and had thus far defied every effort on the part of the officials to trap him.

"What's the matter with you fellows," said the newcomer, "that you haven't got Hardwick? He's got to be taken and right away."

"All right, Mr. Barker," said Williams, the man addressed; "we'll do the job under your direction. Lead on."

Half a dozen men having been collected for the purpose, Barker started up the mountain side, followed by the others, and after a long and difficult ascent came upon a woman sitting on a rock crying bitterly.

"What's the matter?" asked Barker.

"Matter? Matter enough. Look a-yere." Pulling up her sleeve, she showed a welt that had evidently been made by a lash.

"Who did that?" asked Barker.

"My husband."

"Who is your husband?"

"Jim Hardwick."

Barker opened his eyes and looked knowingly at his men.

"Where is Hardwick?" he asked the woman.

"Reckon he's gone up to the"— She checked herself. "Who air you uns anyway?"

"I don't mind your knowing that we're revenue men, and we're going to get Jim Hardwick dead or alive!"

The woman stopped crying and looked fixedly at the men.

"I don't want you to kill him," she said, "but"—

"You mean," said Barker, "that you'd like to see him punished for his treatment of you?"

"Reckon I would."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You help us get him and we'll give you $100."

The woman's face took on a covetous look. Barker followed up his advantage. "Show us the way to the still and keep him talking till we can surround it."

"What'll you do with him?"

"We'll turn him over to you."

He counted out ten crisp treasury notes and handed them to the woman. She took them hesitatingly, as though she did not quite like the job.

Half an hour later the revenue men, led by the woman, had come to a ravine. She paused and said: "The still's up thar. Ef you uns stop this end of the ravin' he can't git out; you get him shore." Barker dashed forward, ordering the others to follow. Williams called to him to wait a moment—perhaps the woman was deceiving them—but Barker paid no attention to him, and he went on with the rest. They found the climbing difficult, but pushed on, Barker displaying an energy that put the rest to shame. Williams alone hung back, bringing up the rear. But nothing like a still appeared. Then the men began to tire of the difficult climb and one by one fell to the rear. Barker, coming to a perpendicular cliff, stopped, waiting till the others came up. Nothing was said till Williams joined them.

"Waal?" he said doubtfully.

"Where's the woman?" asked Barker.

All looked about for her, but she was not to be seen.

"I tell you, Mr. Barker," said Williams, "where I reckon she is."

"Where?"

"With that hundred dollars you give her. And I reckon the hundred dollars is whar the still is. And I don't reckon the still is in this yere ravine neither."

There was an ominous silence.

"I reckon," said Williams, "that we uns might as well go home. Before we could find the still—and I reckon we couldn't—the hull thing would be cleaned out."

"Do you think so?" asked Barker absently. He was thinking of the hundred dollars that he had given the woman and that he had intended to charge up to the government, but that now he would not dare to mention, and it would be a dead loss to himself. He was soon convinced by the others that to try to find either the still or Hardwick or his wife would be like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Mournfully he led the way down the mountain that he had climbed with such high hopes. When he came to the place where he had first seen the woman, there she was in her cabin near by washing dishes as unconcernedly as if nothing unusual had happened.

"Did you uns git him?" she asked, with well affected interest.

No reply was made, and she continued:

"Waal, I reckon you didn't or you would have brought him along. Since I didn't help you out I reckon I orter give you back the money." She handed Barker the hundred dollars, which he took shamefacedly, then without a word continued the descent.

"Gittin' moonshiners," said Williams to Barker, "ain't such easy work, after all."

"No," said the man who had come to Tennessee to show them how to do it; "I can't say it is. Don't you fellows say anything about this affair, and I'll report to Washington that you were under serious disadvantages."

Woman's World

The Pioneer Woman Judge of the National Horse Show.

LADY BECK.

The first woman invited to judge at the national horse show was Lady Beck. At the show, which was held in Madison Square Garden, New York, she officiated with Mr. James G. Marshall of the Riding club in awarding the prizes for undocked saddle horses of the thoroughbred type.

Lady Beck is an Englishwoman who has ridden to hounds in Leicestershire, as well as in Canada and Virginia. At the last national horse show she rode her own hunters over the jumps in Madison Square Garden.

What she knows about hunters was in evidence at the last international horse show in England, where three horses from her stable defeated the pick of the British entries for the capital prize of the show.

Lady Beck is the wife of Sir Adam Beck, a director of the international horse show. Their home is in London, Ont.

Desserts For Children.

Fairy Apples.—Pare and core enough tart cooking apples to fill a baking dish; cover them with sugar and put a little cold water in the dish, also several slices of lemon and two cloves; then pour a little melted butter over the apples and bake them until tender. Serve them cold, with a blob of fruit jelly put on the top of each and whipped cream about them.

Ambrosia.—This delicious dessert requires grated cocoanut, sliced oranges and bananas, sugar and a wee taste of lemon juice. Fill a dish with layers of the different fruits, putting sugar over each one, and continue in this way until the ingredients are all in. Let the dish blend while in a cool place before serving. Fresh cocoanut is needed, and if the milk of the fruit is sweet this may be added to the dessert.

Brown Sugar Sandwiches.—For the children incessantly craving sweets brown sugar is an excellent thing to keep in the house. Spread it thickly on buttered white bread and put the slices together so as to make narrow sandwiches.

Quick Gingercake Pudding.—Get any sort of small or large ginger or molasses cakes from the grocer and cover them with a custard made of boiling hot milk into which several eggs are beaten up. Pour the milk gradually into the eggs, stirring vigorously all the while; sweeten and pour over the cakes, allowing them to stand until they have drunk up a good deal of the custard. Serve warm or cold.

The Polite Mother.

There is but one way to teach good manners to children—good manners, that is, that are worth the practicing and are not mere polish and sham and hypocrisy—but one way, and this is to practice good manners yourself.

All over the land unthinking women are still saying to the casual guest: "How good of you to come!" "Oh, no, you are not late." "Well, it doesn't matter a bit." But to the child it is this old formula: "What did I tell you!" "Don't let me have to speak to you again!" "Thomas, shut that door!" and a hundred other inexcusable crudities.

These inconsistencies of ours rob the child in a hundred ways. They wear upon his nerves as only illogical, irrational, unharmonious and inconsistent things can do. The child brought up in a home of rude, crude manners goes into the world gravely crippled, harpered and handicapped. He has been robbed before he begins his journey.

Capes For the Traveler.

Capes are doubly blessed by the traveler and by fashion, for the need of an auxiliary traveling wrap is great, and the cape amply supplies it. Capes are being interpreted in many and various ways, some of which are charming, others, speaking frankly, grotesque. Among the first, however, must be rated the delightful examples made with an attractive little waistcoat, fastening with large and distinctive buttons.

CHRISTMAS CANDIES.

Four Picked Recipes For Favorite Holiday Candies.

Pinoche.—Two and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar, one-half cupful of cream, butter the size of an egg, one-half cupful of chopped walnuts, one-half cupful of chopped almonds, one teaspoonful of vanilla. Boil the sugar, cream and butter together twenty minutes; add the nuts and vanilla and beat well. When smooth and creamy pour into buttered tins. When cool cut in squares.

Chocolate Squares.—One cupful of sugar, one-quarter cake of chocolate, one-half cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of milk, one-half cupful of butter. Mix this all together and boil it twenty minutes; cool it a very little and add one teaspoonful of vanilla. Pour in pans and, when cool, mark off in squares.

Nut Creams.—Three cupfuls of light brown sugar, whites of two eggs, one cupful of boiling water, one cupful of chopped nuts, one teaspoonful of vanilla. Boil the sugar and water, stirring and beating till the sugar is all dissolved; then let it boil without stirring till it spins a thread. Remove from the fire and let it stand on the table for just a moment, to be sure it has stopped boiling; then pour it over the stiff whites of the eggs, beating with a wire beater all the time; put in the vanilla while you are beating. When it is creamy and getting stiff add the nuts, stir well and spread on buttered paper. If you prefer do not use vanilla, but almond flavoring, and add almonds instead of other nuts.

Candied Orange Peel.—Peel of three oranges, water and sugar. Cut the orange peel into strips one-eighth inch wide and of as even length as possible. Put into a saucepan, cover with cold water and bring slowly to boiling point. Add fresh water, bring to the boiling point again and repeat the process four times. Now make a sirup, using proportionately one pound of sugar to one cupful of water. Place the cooked orange peel in this and simmer slowly until the sirup is almost entirely absorbed. Cool and roll the strips in granulated sugar. The same process can be employed with lemon rind or grapefruit rind. A mixture of all three in a box makes a very acceptable little holiday gift.

Old Yuletide Tales.

There is a legend in Germany that when Eve plucked the fatal apple the leaves of the tree immediately shriveled into needle points and its bright green turned dark. The nature of the tree changed, and it became an evergreen, in all seasons preaching the story of man's fall through that first act of disobedience. Only on Christmas does it bloom brightly with lights and become beautiful with love gifts. The curse is turned into a blessing by the coming of the Christ Child, and thus we have our Christmas tree.

The visits of St. Nicholas to the homes of the people on Christmas eve as an annual custom grew out of a festival in honor of Hertha, a Norse goddess. At this festival the house was decorated with evergreens, and an altar of stone was set up at the end of the hall where the family assembled. From Hertha's stone we get our word "hearthstone." On the stones so set up were heaped fir branches, which were set afire, and through the smoke and flame Hertha was supposed to descend and influence the direction of the flames, from which were predicted the fortunes of those present.

A Skittish Christmas Tree.

The Swedes have a custom at Christmas time of decorating a pet lamb with red ribbons and bells, then loading it with gifts for the family. The lamb is turned loose in the house, and each person attempts to catch it and find his or her gift.

Some Yuletide Jests.

Little Elsie—Santa Claus doesn't go around in a motorcar, does he, mamma?

Mamma—Why, certainly not! He still drives his reindeer, darling.

Little Elsie—Oh, I'm so glad! Tommy Rankin told me he used a motorcar, and I've been in a terrible state since, 'cause I'm afraid the repair shops wouldn't be open at night.

Thirty-seven young ladies of the congregation had in mind thirty-seven pairs of slippers for the curate for Christmas.

But one young lady made known her intention. And when the day arrived the curate received one pair of slippers and thirty-six dressing gowns.

Milly (in horrified whisper)—Mamma, Willie is an infidel!

Mamma—An infidel?

Milly—Yes. He said he don't believe there's any Santa Claus.

"What is the baby crying about?"

"Oh, nothing much. He only wants to eat the Christmas tree."

The Christmas Tree.

The Christmas tree is rooted deep in love;
Its verdant branches tower far above;
Its fruit are emblems of a fairer clime;
Its odors whisper of a happier time.
'Tis planted for all lands to grow and grow,
And faith and hope among its treasures glow,
Till the green life tree in our midst shall stand
And earth once more becomes an Eden land.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Frock For the Party.

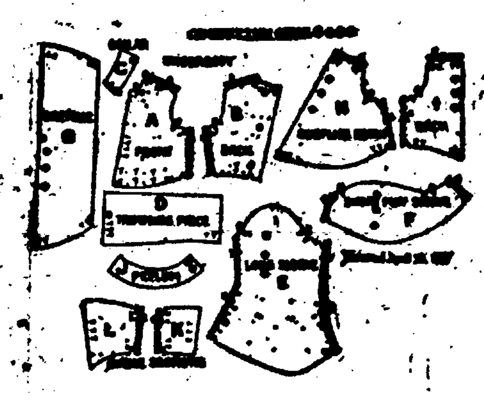
Evening gown of lace and crepe Georgette, with bands of moire on the tunic to replace fur.

Very graceful and pretty is this evening gown with a flounced skirt of dainty lace draped with a tunic of crepe Georgette. Outlining the edge of the tunic is a narrow fold of black moire silk, and this trimming is repeated on the girdle. The bodice is also of crepe Georgette trimmed with lace and tiny buttons. In medium size the dress requires 7 yards lace flouncing 27 inches deep, 4 yards 36-inch crepe Georgette and 4 yards 36-inch satin for the foundation.

So many are the requests for fancy waists that today's lesson will be devoted to the making of the bodice of this frock. Begin with the underbody and plait the front and back, bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations. Close seams as notched. Turn the hem in the back and face the neck with a narrow bias fold of satin, after which the belting may be adjusted to position.

For the trimming piece, gather the lower edge between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above. Adjust on underbody, center-fronts even; stitch lower edges together, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam, and bring back edge to center-back. Stitch upper edge along double "oo" perforations in underbody.

The waist may be finished with a bretelle or in surplice effect, but the latter is in greater vogue. First close the under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Gather along shoulder seam and at lower edge of front and back between double "TT" perforations, also 2 inches above lower edge; center-front indicated by line of 3 and center-back by 2 small "o" perforations.



Arrange on underbody, armhole edges and under-arm seams even; stitch lower edges together crossing in front and back as illustrated on reverse side of envelope. Tack the shoulder edges together from large "O" perforation in underbody to the armhole edge, drawing gathers to fit.

Next close the right side seam of the girdle as notched. Gather along seam and gather the left side edges between double "TT" perforations; draw gathers and stitch tape 4½ inches long under gathers. Finish left side edges for a closing. Adjust, bringing lower back edge of girdle 2 inches below upper edge of skirt. Bring upper front edge of girdle to large "O" perforation near center-front of trimming piece and tack.

The dainty puff sleeve is made by first closing the seam as notched. Gather on crossline of small "o" perforations; draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape under gathers. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing fullness.

Instead of lace flounces bordered material may be used, and the effect is charming.

A PRACTICAL COAT.

This Youthful Effect Is One That Still Holds Popular.

FOR ONE PIECE FROCKS.

For one piece frocks wide striped corduroy is used for this fetching coat with its modish bit of fur around the high collar and deep cuffs. Fastened with novelty buttons, low belted and well flared, this garment means "good style." With it go smart buttoned boots and a dashing turban.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Gargle For Sore Throat.

If the throat tickles and feels raw gargle with a mixture of boric acid — four heaping teaspoonfuls dissolved in a pint of boiling water. Use this when cool three or four times a day. If the throat appears very red use a gargle composed of glycerin, one tablespoonful, and water, three tablespoonfuls. When gargling, throw the head as far back as possible for comfort and gargle thoroughly.

HE WAS REALLY TOO BRIGHT.

It Worried the Baby's Mother to Find Him So Clever.

"Oh, George," cried young Mrs. Merry, running to meet her husband at the door, "I've something the best to tell you!"

"No!" said George. "What is it?"

"Why don't you think—the baby can talk! Yes, sir, actually talk! He's said over and ever so many things. Come right into the nursery and hear him."

George went on.

"Now, baby," said mamma persuasively, "talk some for papa. Say 'How do you do, papa?'"

"Goo, goo, goo, goo," says baby.

"Hear him!" says mamma ecstatically. "Wasn't that just as plain as plain can be?"

George says it is and tries to think so too.

"Now say 'I'm glad to see you, papa.'"

"Da, da, boo, boo, boo!"

"Did you ever?" cries mamma. "He can just say everything. Now, you precious little honey bunny boy, say 'Are you well, papa?'"

"Boo, ba, de, goo, goo."

"There it is," said mamma. "Did you ever know a child of his age who could really talk as he does? He can just say everything he wants to, can't you, you own dear little darling precious you?"

"What that? He says 'Of course I can,' just as plainly as anybody could say it. Oh, George, it really worries me to have him so phenomenally bright. These very brilliant babies nearly always die young."—Pittsburgh Press.

Winter Hats For The Kiddies

It isn't every little girl who has a father or mother with a Fortunatus purse, who can step into the smartest shop in town and order a bonnet or two to cover her golden curls. But a mother's clever fingers can do quite as much as the magic purse if the mother has good models to copy and the right bits of good material to work with.

One cap that may be made at home is much like a Russian Cossack's. It is developed from white velvet for the top and a wide band of white fur for the rest of the hat. A group of three white velvet gardenias with green satin leaves is the side trimming.

A little hat in Chinese effect showing a cord and tassel may be accomplished from beige velvet for the crown top and puffed section and dark blue for the close fitting band, which should be stiffened with buckram. Blue velvet ribbon is used for the crown top trimming, and dull gold tassels are attached at the ends.

In true poke effect is a fur trimmed bonnet of white corded silk. The fur is white, or beaver bands may be substituted. A raspberry colored flat rosette of velvet ribbon lies at the side of the buckram stiffened brim. A soft shade of raspberry georgette crape lines the poke brim.

The ever becoming tam-o'-shanter takes a slightly different tilt in a black velvet hat trimmed solely with two narrow bands of ermine. The band that fits around the head should be stiffened with buckram, while the top is left soft, though cut with a lopsided effect.

Another poke bonnet shows how a bit of brocaded velvet can be put to good use in a child's hat. It is made from old rose velvet with brocading of dull gold. The fur band is skunk. A piece of mother's evening coat would come in very handy just here.

Striped velvet in brown and white makes a fetching little hat when trimmed with two pompons of brown and white. The velvet is gathered under the pompons, as none of the kiddies' hats, like mother's, is covered smoothly this season.

For a very little tot a soft bonnet of white corded silk has a facing ruffle of valenciennes lace. Cords of the silk hold the fullness in place and form the rosette at one side.

An adorable little bonnet of black velvet shows a chin strap of velvet fastening at each side under tailored bows of ermine. The velvet is picoted on the edge and laid over a foundation bonnet of rows of val edging.

Taffeta and tassels are the main points about a green bonnet which is topped with a green velvet crown. The taffeta is folded about the crown, and two circular picoted ruffles of the taffeta fall softly from this. Green chenille tassels, four of them, dangle at front, back and sides.

A conservative model of white felt might be attempted by the home milliner. The crown is blocked rather high, and two circular brims are attached under a band of beaver fur. Ribbon velvet flowers in shades of rose, old blue, tan and mauve make an odd trimming. A large felt hat might be utilized by cutting off several inches, fitting this as a narrow brim.

TWINS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Two Chin-Chins That Make a Jolly Pincushion.

These chubby twins sit with perfect oriental complacency enthroned on a cushion of pink satin, the soft folds of which are gathered over a sacheted base that will readily take pins. They may be clad in any color that matches your room.

"MERRY CHRISTMAS."

Soggy Pie Crusts.

Even though she be an excellent cook nearly every housewife will occasionally have her pies ruined by a soggy bottom crust. To overcome this possibility rub the lower crust with the white of an egg. This prevents the juice from soaking through, leaving the crust crisp and tender.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

The skirt is simple and graceful, being gathered about the waistline and finished at the bottom with three narrow ruffles and a heading of velvet ribbon interrupted at frequent intervals with bow-knots. The girdle is so deep that it is almost part bodice, while the lace underblouse has a V-neck and elbow sleeves held in with velvet bands. In medium size the dress requires 5 yards 36-inch satin and 1½ yards 36-inch all-over lace.

RECORD BELL RINGER.

South Bend (Ind.) Sexton Pulled at Rate of 755 Miles In Seventeen Years.

South Bend, Ind.—Seventeen years as sexton at St. Patrick's Catholic church in this city, pulling the rope on the great bell at the church more than 750 miles in that time, is the unusual record which has just been completed by Charles S. Schubert.

He has rung the bell for practically 7,900 services. He has averaged one service a day through the year and three times on Sunday, making an annual total of 429 services.

In addition to this, Schubert has rung the bell three times a day for the angelus. For each service he rings the bell twice. He averages ringing the bell six times on week days and nine on Sunday. Therefore in a year, averaging twenty-five strokes to the pull for the 2,346 times he rings the bell annually, he would give the bell 58,650 strokes. Now, in each pull he jerks the rope four feet, making 234,600 feet annually, or 3,988,200 feet, or 755½ miles in seventeen years.

GRANDPA OF WOLVES.

Caught by a Wisconsin Sheriff at Twin Lakes Weighed 119 Pounds.

Rhinelander, Wis.—The largest timber wolf ever seen in the county was trapped by Deputy Sheriff Andrew Anderson near Twin Lakes.

The deputy brought the animal's body to Gagen, where he had it on display for several days. Mr. Anderson, who has trapped for forty years and has captured more wild animals than almost any man in the state, declares that he has never before seen a wolf anywhere near as large.

Weighing 119 pounds, the body measured six feet from the end of the nose to the tip of the tail. The animal was three feet in height and had been caught in a trap before, the right forefoot having been clipped off.

Neighborliness.

Be interested in your neighbor, but not curious.

Borrow not and then you may not be asked to lend.

Respect your neighbor's line full of clean clothes and do not select the wash day for the beating of your rugs.

It is said walls have ears. Therefore speak low if you would keep your affairs private.

Don't consider your neighbor's house a stepping-in place to enter without knocking.

Don't start a quarrel over your neighbor's children, but preserve friendliness.

Make your little girl use the soft pedal when practicing if there is sickness in your neighbor's house.

Neighborliness should be nothing more than a steady courtesy.

The Wild Elephant.

A wild elephant has such a delicate sense of smell that it can detect an enemy nearly a mile away.

The following advertisements are reprinted with the thought that the messages they contain will prove particularly interesting during the Holiday Season. CHRISTMAS is a good time to start those in whom one is interested in the habit of Systematic Saving, which is the first step toward financial independence and character building; you can do this by presenting them with a savings account or one of the receipts issued by The Electric Co., which carry interest at 6% and when the partial payments are completed can be converted into perferred stock which is paying dividends at the rate of 7%.

When you give such a present, accompany it with the suggestion that the recipient SAVE FOR A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

The Electric Company has sold to investors all of its perferred stock. This offering is made possible because one of those interested in The Electric Co., is buying stock of shareholders who live at a distance at $105. per share for the $100. perferred stock, in order to re-sell it in Fulton at $100. per share and $10. per share. This is done because it is felt to be mutually advantageous that the customers and neighbors of the Company have an opportunity to buy its perferred stock.

Under these conditions, at the present time we are unable to promise stock enough to satisfy everybody. Preference will be given first to the smallest subscriptions, and we would rather sell $10. shares than $100. shares.

WE WISH ALL OUR NEIGHBORS THE COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.

The logical investment at this time is in public utilities. They have shown their ability to maintain earnings despite depression in many other lines of business, because they minister to many different people and to the power needs of many different lines of business.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

If things don't just come to suit you,
And the world seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with your boostin'
Just to help the thing along?
'Cause if things should stop a-goin',

Cast your leaves upon the waters,
They'll come back, a saying true;
Mebbe, too, they'll come back buttered,
When some fellow boosts for you.

GROCERY STORES MAY REMAIN CLOSED SATURDAY

A movement was afoot today, led by one of the leading retail grocers, to secure the assent of every house in the cit yto remain closed all day Christmas Day. No definite results of the canvass are obtainable, but at any rate, it is decided to refrain from delivering goods on the joyous day. The city's grocers will keep open stores each night during the week, including Christmas eve.

WEATHER FORECAST

Partly cloudy tonight and Wednesday; probably snow flurries, moderate variable winds.

Old Chris Has Unpacked Many Bundles Under Direction of Secretary Hollenga

Kiddies' Bare, Cold Hands and Feet Made Warm by C. of C. Cris

Preparations for the Municipal Christmas tree are in full swing at the Chamber of Commerce rooms. Rows of shoes and slippers, including little red bootees, caps and mittens, skates and horns and blue eyed dollies bespeak the presence of the Christmas spirit.

Secretary Hollenga's expression is that of one exactly pleased. It is with a master hand that he is acting as an executive for Old Chris. As the little kiddies have trooped in to register it is understood that a few half frozen little hands and feet scarcely shod went out newly clad—and a little heart pounding under a rough old jacket sang its paen of praise to the Chamber of Commerce.

Arrangements are made that when a child goes to the Chamber rooms to register he or she draws a number from a box. The boys draw from one box and the girls from another. This, Secretary Hollenga explained, is to insure a boy from getting a girl's gift and vice versa. The gifts contributed are made up of warm articles of clothing, shoes, stockings, underwear, mittens, also caps, quilts and blankets, and last but not least, toys and candy.

There will be something warm to wear, some plaything and something sweet to eat for each child who attends the tree and presents himself at the Chamber rooms after the exercises at the tree. No gifts will be placed on thetree.

The large tree ready for the lighting has been erected at the junction of Oneida and First streets. It is a well grown tree and bears itself as if appreciative of the honor in being Fulton's First Municipal Christmas tree. When the secretary was asked today the reason the tree had been placed so high, and wouldn't it be hard to reach, the information given was that the secret lay in knowing how to "reach high." This, upon being translated, undoubtedly means that all things are within reach—even a Municipal Christmas tree.

The committee in charge of the tree is made up of Messrs. J. J. Jordan, M. A. Stranahan, Max Katz, Willis Morin, D. M. Sullivan and D. S. Hollenga. Sitting with Secretary Hollenga is the children's committee on arrankements. The following children comprise the committee: Edna Johnson, Emery street; Eva Joslin, So. 6th st.; Hazel Woods, Rochester st.; Arnold Fitzgerald, So. 1st st.; Covert Jones, So. 6th st.; and Millard Francis, Fay street.

The program arranged for Wednesday night will open at 8 o'clock with two selections by the Elk's band. The second number will be community singing, "Joy to the World," which will be followed by an address. The Schumann Club will sing "Silent Night, Holy Night," and another address will follow. Community singing, "O. Come All Ye Faithful" and the appearance of Santa will close the program.

The band will lead the march to thhe Chamber of Commerce rooms where the gifts will be given the children holding numbers previously drawn when they registered.

The spirit back of the movement is broad and fine and marks a new era in Fulton's growth. It is indeed a symbol of Hope, Peace and Good Will. Well, may every stranger within the gates of our little city on Wednesday night say with us—"This is my Christmas tree."

Electricity is King in Lewis House Block —a Wonderful Show

King Electricity is holding high carnival at the Electric company's show rooms in Cayuga street. In the attractively arranged show room are found the many, varied appliances through which electricity is made so capable a servant in the home.

To the person who has not kept apace with the electrical world to see this demonstration of the many uses of the mysterious agency is an education. As one sees a sewing machine run, clothes washed and wrung, toast made, coffee percolated, food cooked, toes warmed, hair curled and the various other aids suggested, it is quite enough to set one's head spinning.

Mrs. W. B. Smith, who prepares delicious tidbits, electrically, comes to the rescue of the astonished visitor, and as one sips and tastes, and tastes and sips and reflects on the wonders of this age it doesn't seem quite real. One cannot help wondering what the great grandmothers of this day's folk would say if they perchance could visit this display. Wouldn't Mistress Mary have a happy time over the modern foot-warmer? How Marthy and Janey would bob their curls and adjust their specs, as they eagerly exclaimed over their cups of delicious coffee. Visions of back logs and dipped candles dance before a bewildered imagination as the little electric light gleams its message, a promise of greater things yet to be.

Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz says—"The industry is only in its infancy, and our engineers in the kindergarten," and Mr. Thomas A. Edison says he cannot explain electricity now any more than he could when be began its study. Our own faint-observation of the uses of this mysterious power teach us it has become the great emancipator of mankind. Through it humanity is able to overcome space, time and even climatic conditions. What more shall be accomplished through this medium within the span of the next fifty years cannot be figured. The limit of electrical development, through increased use of electricity and electrical appliances, is absolutely beyond our imagination.

A visit to the show rooms in Cayuga street is an education. Mr. Frank Hare assisted by Mr. Thomas Farrell interestingly explain the uses of the various appliances and in a highly efficient way demonstrate the uses of El Bako, El Grillo and all the other Els. Speaking in simple terms, it is a demonstration worth seeing.

WAR BULLETINS

Rome—Bulgarians are systematically destroying Serbia, according to M. Vuluvic, the Serbian minister of publiv works, who arrived at Messina with a number of Serbian refugees today.

Vrania was located and then razed to the ground by the Bulgarians.

"Under ruthless Bulgarian rule only the most destitute peasants will remain in Serbia," said M. Vuluvic. "The Bulgarians are sparing nothing but are wiping out everything dearest to the Serbs' hearts—monuments, relics of past Serbian history and historic buildings—all are being systematically [illegible].

"The Ser[illegible] did not offer passive resist[illegible] the invaders. It fought bravely while waiting for the the help that never came. When peace comes the treaty will be signed in Sofia, not Belgrade."

Athens—Varna, the chief Bulgarian port on the Black sea has again been bonbarded by a Russian cruiser and two torpedo boasts, according to information received here today. These advices report that a squadron of 16 Russian transports, filled with troops, accompanied the Russian warships.

London—Information from Athens that strong forces of allied troops have arrived off the Greek coast indicates that soldiers withdrawn from from the Dardanelles are being sent into the Balkans."

WHAT AMERICAN FARMERS NEED

That co-operative organization of farmers is the remedy for American agriculture's shortcomings is the conclusion reached by a special commission created by the State of Ohio to study the subject.

In a partial report—summarized in another column—Mr. Myron T. Herrick, as chairman of the commission, and Mr. J. L. Taber, master of the Ohio State Grange, declare that the trouble is that farmers do not use their credit and resources collectively in large groups as do business men and financiers in the cities.

The report opposes financial aid from the government and advocates the organization of farmers from the plains to tide-water. Legislation, State and national, is urged to remove existing legal obstacles to the forming and operating of such associations.

Mr. Herrick, as is well known, is an authority on the subject of farm credit and this report will have great weight with all interested in the solution of a problem of the highest national importance.—N. Y. Herald.

THE COW'S MOVE

One of the speakers at the recent meeting of the National Dairy Council, in Chicago, dealing with the market problem in dairy products, spoke of the successful cooperation of the raisin growers round Fresno, California, and the way modern market methods had proved an outlet for the miles and miles of raisin grapes grown there.

Immediately another speaker arose and described his visit a month before to a dozen dairy farms right in the Fresno raisin country. He said that, while most people had gone to California to raise oranges, raisins, olives and other specialties, they had eventually had to add the dairy cow. No matter what they raised first the dairy cow followed along.

California is far from being a dairy state yet, still her dairy products are worth more than the citrus crop, more than canned fruit or dried fruit—more than any other crop except hay and forage. The cow yields thirty-three million dollars a year, against twenty-five millions from citrus.

In Florida, where alfalfa is not common, and strange plants have to be used for hay, livestock is also the biggest farm industry—thirty million dollars, against fourteen millions for fruit. Dairy products bring half as much as the citrus crop.

A good many growers have gone West or South to get away from the cow. Tired of milking her and trying to figure a profit on her under unfavorable conditions, they have picked up, emigrated and bid her good-by forever—as they thought. But she has the ability to emigrate, too, and in the new sections not only becomes necessary, but can be established under more favorable conditions.

This ability of the cow to move when her turn comes makes dairying our most rapidly growing farm industry, with $650,000,000 worth of products to market. It seems strange that little has yet been done to create better markets for milk, butter, cheese, ice cream and dairy sundries. But now a live movement is afoot to that end. Next week we shall publish the story of the organization that is promoting it— the National Dairy Council. It is one of the biggest efforts to advertise dairy products that has ever been started.—Country Gentleman.

INTELLIGENCE VS. MUSCLE

When the development of the physical, purely, is sought to the exclusion of the intellectual, or, spiritual, it makes to a step downward. Whether that development be at the expense of an individual, a community, or a nation the error is the same.

But a few days ago a young man, a graduate of our local high school and now a college student in a distant city, came to the office of this newspaper with the inquiry—"Why is it when any of our boys go out into the world the record of their athletic achievements are chroniciled, but rarely are the intellectual feats noted for applause?" Perhaps the best answer would be that groups of people best respond to that which interests them most. If our applause coaxes physical prowess, naturally physical prowess will occupy the foreground. If we trace in our histories to Ancient Greece we shall understand that the laurel wreath was not accorded to muscular powers alone, but graced the heads of writers, orators and musicians. Which of these talents, encouraged and nurtured, laid the foundation for the fame of that country we all know. Is it not possible to live and learn that lesson in our own home land.

Let us not assume to build the nation, but let us make the community and the nation will care for itself. To do this we should begin with the future citizens, the little children of today. Let us lead them aright. Let us lead them, here and now, until the physical, the athletic, is subservient to the intellectual, in verse in song and oratory.

Until a bigger band of enthusiasts will attend a debate than a basketball or football game, we shall stay exactly where we are. This need not necessitate the exclusion of athletics but rather the subservience of them in intellectual growth.

When we as a grown people raise our standard intelligently the future citizens will happily bow before the footlights for our applause. It is the children wo reflect the ideals of the parent mind, therefore parent mind must needs get busy.

A BIG HIGHWAY OF OPPORTUNITY

Let me tell you what you could have seen on a city street the other day.

A little ragged chap was coming along about noon, when a lot of hardworked, high-skilled mechanics were pouring out of a machine shop. Some of them had little bundles wrapped in newspaper, and some came with little pails of home made dinner things.

Passing at the same moment was a tall, well-dressed, scholarly looking man, who noticed the little hungry looking boy and stopped and said something that sounded like:

"What are you wandering about on the streets for? You should be in school."

The man, having delivered this snowy lecture, walked rapidly up the street.

Just then one of the big-hearted iron-workers stepped up to the laddies and thrust at him a lump of bread and butter, which was evidehtly the other half of what he had kept for his own luncheon. Little as he had, he divided with one who had less.

I would sooner take chances with that true-hearted, rough-handed, overall man than with the well-dressed learned man who went on his way without recognizing the opportunity that actually crossed his path.—John Wanamaker.

OPINIONS OF STATE EDITORS

President Wilson and his Democratic adherents have exposed this country to an invasion from abroad that is far more dangerous than any backed by bayonets and powder. It is high time that he look to preparedness, but it should be against the peaceful invasion he and his administration have invited, but which will be all the same destructive of the citizenry of this land.—Oneida Post.

Ordinarily, it would not be necessary to swear experts to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the American people that they were actually prosperous. The only reasonable explanation of Secretary McAdoo's innovation is that he realizes that far-sighted business men suspect that the present prosperity rests on the precarious basis, and are fearful of the future, unless the tariff law is revised upwards before the war closes.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

* * *

There are better ways for producing national revenues than that of the tax upon small incomes as is now proposed or the taxing of bank checks automobiles, and gasoline. The ideal method for raising money for national purposes is by the protective tariff which will give it sufficient money for all legitimate national purposes and at the same time protect our labor and our industries from the invasion of the products of the cheap labor of Europe—at the close of the war—which is much more imminent and much more dangerous than the invasion of any European army. —Jamestown Journal.

The Republicans, while assisting the President in the laudable plan to co-operate on Preparedness, at no time will surrender an inch to the Democrats, on the equally vital issue of the Tariff. On that head political lines will be as sharply drawn as ever, the contest this fall will be waged as relentlessly and victory on it will come to the Republican party, as certainly as the votes are cast and counted. —Cohoes Republican.

In 1914, when the Republicans of New York regained possession of the legislature, their total of pluralities in the legislative vote was 84,000. These Republican legislative candidates secured total pluralities of 118,000 in spite of the spectacular comeback of Tammany Hall in the New York City contests. These figures show the steady and irrestible drift of opinion toward the Republican party.—Fort Edward Advertiser.

* * *

The Democratic administration need not think it can fool the American people by selling Panama Canal bonds to fill its depleted treasury. Everybody will know exactly where the money came from and where it goes.—Yonkers News.

There are to be found in President Wilson's address to congress several suggestions for raising more revenues for the support of the government and the carrying out of its policies. He would levy taxes on gasoline, bank checks, pig iron, steel and automobiles, thus imposing heavier burdens on production and industry, but not a word did hesay about revising the tariff law so as to make it a more productive source of revenue. It is unfortunate for the country that it has for president at this time a man who is so thoroughly wedded to the theory of free trade that he cannot see his way clear to recommend to congress the doing of the very thing that ought to be done under the circumstances.—Plattsburgh Press.

DECLARES THEDA BARA IS THE MODERN MEDUSA

Writing in the Chicago Herald Miss Louella Parsons the celebrated critic delves into an analysis of Theda Bara, the wonderful French actress, who comes to the Quirk Theater, today in the latest William Fox Photoplay Supreme "Sin," which was written and produced by Herbert Brenon.

"Her hair is like the serpent locks of Medusa, her eyes have the cruel cunning of Lucretia Borgia, till now held up as the world's wickedest woman, her mouth is the mouth of the sinister, scheming Delilah, and her hands are those of the blood bathing Elizabeth Bathory, who slaughtered young girls that she might bathe in their life blood and so retain her beauty.

"Can it be that fate has reincarnated in Theda Bara the soules of these monsters of medieval times? Scientists have questioned this most extraordinary of women to secure fresh evidence to support their half-proved laws of transmigration of souls; but the result has only been to prove that, though Miss Bara is greatest delineator of evil types on the stage or screen today, she is in real life a sweet wholesome woman who detests the abnormal."

POLICE BALL SHAPING ITSELF

Something Novel in the Way of Music May Be Introduced—Proceeds for Pension Fund.

While the committee in charge of the policemen's ball have not announced the number of tickets so far sold. it is likely that the coming event will eclipse in attendance and other features the two previous efforts.

The program is in the hands of the Kavanaugh Press, and the committees in charge of the ball are beginning to make final arrangements for the big social event. It should be borne in mind that the dance is only ten days off, as it occurs New Year's eve.

Among the features planned by the committee may be a bell dance, for which the music is such dances is furnished by the ringing of a number of small bells of different tones arranged in different parts of the big hall. If this feature is introduced at the ball the plan will be to suspend the bells from the ceiling of the hall, and hide them behind draperies.

The program is as follows:

Two-step, "Patrolman's Parade;" waltz, "Waltz of the Season;" one-step, "Merry Whirl;" two-step,"When Sunday Comes to Town;" waltz, "First Love;' two-step, "Dublin Bay;" fox trot, "Shadowland;" two-step, "That Soothing Symphony;" waltz, "Clarabelle;" lancers, "King Pin;" two-step, "My Sweet Adair;" waltz, "The Girl Who Smiles;" one-step, "Abray;" fox trot, "Cling to Me Closer;" two-step, "Kentucky Home;" waltz, "Autumn Life;" quadrille, "The Major;" one-step, "Minstrel Parade."

The M. E. Reynolds orchestra will furnish music for thed ancing and the committee of arrangements comprise the following patrolmen: L. C. Brown, chairman; Michael Bray and Herbert C. Boland. Officer Brown is the steering comittee on program, and the floor arrangements will be under Michael Bray, Herbert C. Boland, Frank E. Smith, E. J. Dyer and L. C. Brown.

MINETTO'S PROSPERITY ASSURED, SAYS LAWYER

Yesterday's Oswego Times contains the following:

The erection of a $2,000,000 cotton factory at Minnetto will follow the division of Oswego Town and the erection of the town of Minetto, it was stated today. The statement was made by Francis E. Cullen, representing T. D. McChesney, president of the Columbia Mills, Inc., to the Times Mr. Cullen said that Mr. McChesney had given him authority to make the announcement.

Mr. Cullen said that the factories of the company are now at Chicago, Bay City, Wilkes-Barre, Saginaw, Detroit, Jersey City, Meriden, Conn., and Minetto, but that it was the policy of thec ompany to center all possible manufacturing at Chicago in the west and Minetto in the east.

The proposed brick mills will employ 1,500 persons. They will be located between thep resent factories buildings on the West River road and the Lackawanna Railroad tracks and just north of the company's tenement houses in Crown avenue.

The cotton mill will be 580 by 381 feet, about one-fourth being four stories high and the rest one story. The lace curtain mill is to be 422 by 381 feet, with one-third of the structure four stories in height and the remainder one story high.

The company's product, window shades, requires the use of large quantities of cotton cloth, approximately 30,000,000 yards having been made into shades so far this year in all of the company's plants. At present this cotton is purchased from outside manufacturers, and it is proposed by the company to monufacture it at Minetto. The output of the new factory will supply all the plants in the other cities.

The plan will require housing facilities for the many employes at Minetto and in the surrounding country. The Minetto Improvement Committee has been organized to assist the company in its project.

It was stated today that should the division of the town be not made the company will not go forward with the new factories but will erect the buildings in connection with some other plant.

Mr. Cullen stated the project had the support of the entire river valley, cities and towns. The present payroll of thef actory is now $6,000 per week, and with the new lace curtain and cotton factories will be increased to $24,000 per week or $1,200,000 per year. It is estimated, Mr. Cullen said that of this amount Oswego City and Fulton will receive at least 80 per cent. through trade.

"I don't know what the Board of Supervisors will do," concluded Mr. Cullen, "but it seems to me that this is the greatest opportunity Minetto and the cities of Oswego and Fulton have had in many years for industrial development.

"The company now employs 530 monthly. It finds no trouble with the people of Minetto who understand and are interested in the welfare of the company. The opposition all comes from the western end of the town, where the people are interested in farming alone.

"The company is sorry if its plans interfere with the history and traditions of the town of Oswego, but we are convinced that Minetto prefers factories to traditions."

SETTLEMENT OF CASE AGAINST BRADLEY CO.

MUSICAL FIVE ALL READY FOR THE ROAD

"The Musical Monarchs," who it is said contemplate visiting many nearby cities with their act recently staged at the Elks' Minstrel show, have engaged the services of Howard A. Zuck, the popular tonsorial artist as press agent, and Merton E. Reynolds, another popular tonsorial artist and talented musician as well as librarian and property man.

These new acquisitions to the already popular act bid fair to further the success of the undertaking, as Mr. Zuck is possessed of much ability along the line of work for which he has been selettaed, having served as dramatic critic on several of the large French and German dailies, prior to engaging in his present business, which change was made necessary through his having become afflicted with writers' cramp. Mr. Reynolds, also adds much strength to the undertaking having had unlimited experience along the line for which he has been selected in the large orchestras of New York, Geneva, and elsewhere.

Fulton May Lose Busy Industry, the Rumor

During the past fe wdays a rumor has been afloat that the Spanswick Manufacturing plant of this city is contemplating a movement whereby the local plant would merge with a larger manufacturing concern. In an interview this morning with the president, Mr. W. H. Spanswick, it was acknowledged that stockholders in the concern and residing in another city are ambitiously working to effect the merging. In that event Fulton's busy little bee, as the knitting mill has been dubbed, would be removed to another city.

Mr. Spanswick would not say this morning that any definite move had been made towards carrying out the movement planned by certain of the stockholders, but he admitted that the men involved in the plan had considerable strength in dictating the policies of the concern, and that the contemplated increase in production of the factory has been decided.

"Our production now is about 400 dozens garments daily as compared to the 100 dozens which was until a short time ago our average output," Mr. Spanswick said. "The stockholders of our company are in favor of increasing our output to 1,000 dozens daily which stock we would have no difficulty in selling as one of our largest jobbers informs us that they hope to see the output of our factiry at 1,000 or more.

"The business we are now doing is not 'war business,' either," he continued, "but every garment is being used in the United States.

The growth of the Spanswick Knitting company has been surprisingly rapid of late and its loss to the community would be sadly felt. It numbers more than fifty employees all of who mare experienced knitting mill workers and receive a good wage. Five years ago the plant started with three employees with Mr. Spanswick at the head.

Michael Bray, jr., has been elected manager. The team will be chosen from the following list of candidates: Pullen, Davenport, Guppy, LeRoy, Green, Ives and Gardner.

BRITISH TROOPS LEAVE 2 FRONTS

Turks Permit Retirement of Force That Cost England Thousands of Lives.

London—The British troops have been withdrawn from the Gabe Tepe and Suvla Bay fronts of the Gallipoli Peninsula. The evacuation of the positions and the re-embarkation of the forces, according to official advices, was accomplished with surprisingly small casualties.

Thus ends them ost disastrous undertaking of British arms in the great war, for no one in London now believes a further effort will be made to maintain the unequal struggle on the tongue of land that runs down from Thrace and constitutes the outer rampart of Constantinople. The army on the tip of the peninsula, facing the formidable position of Achi Baba, is not affected by thew ithdrawal operationes further north, the War Office intimates, but the common sense view taken by the man in the street is that with the preponderating strength of the expedition removed the next order will send the men at Seddul-Bahr aboard the transports, and the "blunder of the Dardanellees" will be a definitely closed book.

While Great Britain has been prepared for the news of the abandonment of the campaign against the straits since the failure of thel ast great offensive in August, the recall of General Sir Ian Hamilton in October made it almost certain. The first word from General Hamilton's successor, General C. C. Monro, was a recommendation that the attempt to force the historic waterway be abandoned. Fast on the heels of this recommendation Lord Gitchener, Secretary of State for War, was sent to the theater to look over the situation. The War Secretary had been back in London little more than a fortnight when this step was taken, that meant the end of all allied hopes to open the gates of Stamboul.

All the military writers agree this morning that General Monro, in evacuating the Suvla Bay and "Anzav" positions with insignificant loss of life, though his front extended more than ten miles, with scarcely a foot immune from the shell fire of the Turks has accomplished one of the most wonderful feats of the great war. When it is added that all the guns and supplies have been removed BRITISH ..z(y safety, too, to another base, the consensus of thep ress is that the heartfelt gratitude of the nations is due to Lord Kitchener and General Monro, who are responsible for the miracle.

War Office Briefly Announces Withdrawal

Notwithstanding what was almost a certain foreshadowing of the action, the announcement yesterday by the War Office came as a distinct shock to the nation. The announcement ,brief, read as follows:—

"All the troops at Suvla and Anzac together with their guns and stores, have been successfully transferred with insignificant casualites to another sphere of operation."

The word spread like wildfire trough the streets. the clubs, the hotels and wherever men gather. Following the first shock of the officially admitted failure of a great enterprise, a feeling of mingled relief and regret was expressed. A popular halfpenny newspaper sums up the public's attitude in these words:—"Thus ends the enterprise on which the highest hopes were built and which, if it had succeeded, probably would have turned the tide of the war. Our troops from first to last were within a few miles of victory"

The news was quietly received in the House of Commons. In giving to the House the War Office announcement the Premier, Mr. Asquith added that the transfer was made in pursuance of a decision reached by the Cabinet some time ago.

"The operation so successfully carried out," said the Premier, "reflects the utmost credit upon the General on the spot, upon the Admiral, the staff and all ranks of both the army and the navy."

A later statement by the War Office issued during the evening, referred to the fact that the withdrawal was accomplished without the knowledge of the opposing Turks and read as follows:

"Further details of the evacution of the Anzac and Suvla zones have been received. Without the Turks being aware of them ovement a great army has been withdrawn from one of the areas occupied on the Gallipoli Peninsula, although in the closest of contact with the enemy. By this contraction of the front operations at other points of the line will be more effecively carried out.

"Sir Charles Monro gives great great credit for this skillfully conducted transfer of forces to the generals commanding and the Royal Navy."

BRITAIN LOOKS TO ORGANIZED LABOR

London—Mr. David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, gave an account of his stewardship in the House of Commons last night. Beginning with the oft repeated story of the insufficiency of munitions in the early days of the war and the history of the establishment of his department to remedy this situation, the Minister gradually warmed to his subject and reached the climax with the declaration that the success of the Allies in the war depends on the attitude of organized labor— whether it will allow the government to recruit a sufficient number of skilled men for the factories which the Munitions Department has brought into being.

"We want eighty thousand skilled men and from two to three hundred thousand unskilled men for these new factories," he said.

"We must reduce the proportion of our orders which go abroad and develop our home resources. Upon the supply of labor depends, I think, our succesca in this war. Upon this depends whether we can reduce the cost of the war by scores of millions of pounds. Upon this depends whether we can supply our troops with the right sort of guns and enable them to make next year's campaign a success.

"Here only organized labor can help us. We have done our best to get skilled labor by the system of munitions volunteers. It is no use my going into the question of why we got only five or six thousand men, although that story may have to be told later.

"The whole question depends on organized labor. Unless it allows us to put unskilled workers on the work which hitherto has been the monopoly of skilled labor we cannot perform this task. There can be only one appeal—namely, to patriotism. Victory depends on this. Hundreds of thousands of precious lives depend on labor's answer.

"It is a question whether we are goinng to bring thew ar to an end in a year or linger along in the blood stained path. Labor has the answer."

How did we ever get along without it?

It is the mechanical force behind the Chamber of Commerce movement to rebuild this city of "diversified opportunities," and in the care that is to be bestowed upon the rising generation. ¶ The lesson to be learned in the machine here pictured is the coordination of its more than 3,800 parts which go to make up a triumph of a centralized force for good in community building for Fulton.

BURR McINTOSH
as "J. Rufus Wallingford."

Burr McIntosh, who is pleasantly sojourning in Ithaca and playing the part of "J. Rufus Wallingford" in the Pathe series of that name, was walking back to his hotel the other day after a hard day's work in the Wharton studios where the pictures are being made. Ithaca's annual four days' fair was in progress and the streets were unusually crowded. In an alleyway just off the sidewalk our genial friend spied a crook of the kind who frequent fairs while on the hunt for easy money, made up to represent a farmer and standing behind an improvised counter made of a board upon the top of a barrel. On the board reposed three cards which looked to be the common ordinary garden variety. The crook was shouting "Here y'are, gents! Pick it out! Pick out the picture card. Any amount you can't!"

A crowd of men surrounded him, a number of whom had lost amounts running from one to ten dollars. Mr. McIntosh stopped to look. The crook saw him and cried, "Make way for the big fellow. He wants to pick it!" Mr. McIntosh put down a five dollar bill. The gambler covered it. The actor picked up the picture card. The crook cried "Ten this time!" "J. Rufus" put down his ten and again picked the picture card. The crowd began to laugh and jeer while the crook's face was a study in surprise and chagrin. "Come again for twenty" he finally yelled. Again the money was covered and again "J. Rufus" won. The crook was speechless. Mr. McIntosh then took from his pocket a card which is used in the "Wallingford" pictures, reading "J. Rufus Wallingford, Promoter." Then, turning to a gaping, small boy nearby he peeled a bill from the roll he had just acquired and said, "Here, sonny; see that large building on the corner? well go and get a thirty-day option on it."

"No wonder that fellow got the best of me," gasped the crook, looking at the card.

Later in the day the knight of the barrel learned that under the "make-up" of "J. Rufus" was the person of Burr McIntosh, who Kellar, the late Hermann, and other famous experts both here and abroad have declared to have no superior in the manipulation of a pack of cards.

Burr refuses to tell even his intimates how he picks "the little joker."

"LITTLE PIPES" PLENTY.

But "Soup" Ran Low—Slang of Wet Goods Drummer.

Drumright, Okla.—In the code of the whisky peddlers and runners throughout the oil fields "big pipe" means quart bottles of whisky, and "little pipe" means pints. Beer is called "soup" when telegrams are sent or when it is ordered by telephone.

The code was revealed when a dealer at Wirt ordered by telephone from Waurika and got the wrong man on the wire.

"I have plenty of 'big pipe,'" he said, "but I am entirely out of 'little pipe,' and you may send along some 'soup.'"

The man who received the message made inquiries and learned that the order was for whisky and beer in the code.

When a Man Wants Too Much.

A fine old specimen of southern mammy answered the ring. The caller was informed that the lady of the house was out. "Is yo' lookin' foh rooms?" he was asked. He replied that he wanted a room with modern conveniences, such as hot and cold water; private bath, steam heat, etc.

"Yaas, suh. Well, it's dis way: Ev'ything yo' mention is used by de family, an' ennybody dat taks a room in dis house am expected to git what yo' speak of on de outside."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

PICTURE VERSIONS OF A. H. WOODS PLAYS

BROADWAY'S GREATEST SUCCESSES TO BE PRODUCED ON SCREEN IN NEAR FUTURE.

PATHE ACQUIRES THE RIGHTS

Remarkable List of Dramas Will Be Filmed Under George Fitzmaurice's Direction.

The New York newspapers have been giving considerable prominence of late to an agreement between the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and A. H. Woods, whereby Pathe receives the motion picture rights to all the plays that have been and will be produced by Mr. Woods. The announcement of the agreement is of particular importance to both the theatrical and motion picture worlds, since Mr. Woods is the owner of what has been the largest stock remaining of theatrical successes not yet put into pictures. The list of plays which thus becomes available for motion picture purposes is a most remarkable one, embracing as it does many of the greatest theatrical successes of recent years.

These plays have been the prize for which many motion picture concerns have been angling for many a day. At the time the papers were signed there were three large immediate cash offers lying upon Mr. Woods' desk. With the acquisition of the plays Pathe becomes the possessor of the best stock of picture material held by any company. That they will add prestige to the already well-known Gold-Rooster program, on which they will be placed, goes without question.

It is announced that work will be started at once upon the filming of these plays. George Fitzmaurice, who made for Pathe the big successes "Via Wireless" and "At Bay," has been entrusted with the production of many of the adaptations. In his casts will be used so far as possible the actors who appeared in the original productions, among whom are many of the leading players of the day, such as Florence Reed and Robert Edeson. George Brackett Seitz and Ouida Bergere, both well-known playwrights, will make the adaptations. The first play to be filmed will be "New York," with Miss Florence Reed.

The rise of A. H. Woods from ten cent melodrama to a position in the front rank of theatrical producers is one of the most spectacular in the history of the American theatre. Within a few years he has established himself firmly as the most successful, original and daring of managers. A list of the "hits" during the past five years will show the name of A. H. Woods tacked on the majority of the most emphatic ones. For instance it was he who gave us the international musical success "Madame Sherry," to be followed later in the operatic field by "Gypsy Love," which charmed two continents. He, too staged the laughable farce, "The Girl in the Taxi," which also was played abroad. It was Mr. Woods who made a star of Julian Eltinge, the famous impersonator. In "Potash and Perlmutter" he gave New York something new and scored another hit.

More recently he has given to the public such sterling successes as "The Song of Songs," "Kick In," "Innocent," "The High Cost of Loving," "The Yellow Ticket," "Common Clay," and "Abe and Mawruss," the last two the most notable successes of the current season.

As for players, Mr. Woods has assembled under his banner such prominent artists as John Mason, Jane Cowl, Dorothy Donnelly, Florence Reed, Richard Bennett, Julian Eltinge, Barney Bernard, Madame Cottrelly, Irene Fenwick, Cyril Keightley, Thomas A. Wise, Forrest Winant, Pauline Frederick, Lew Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Josephine Victor, Jane Grey, Emmett Corrigan, Macy Harlan, Marguerite Sylva, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Bernard Granville, Adele Ritchie, Sam Bernard, Louise Dresser, and a host of others.

Mr. Woods is the owner of the Eltinge Theatre and lessee and manager of the Republic Theatre in New York. Pathe was represented in the negotiations by General Manager Louis J. Gasnier.

A Kipling work will at last be seen in motion pictures. He is one famous author who up to now has not lent his talents to the screen. Pathe, it is announced, has acquired the picture rights to "The Light That Failed," perhaps Kipling's best-known work, and turned it over to Edward Jose to produce.

For the first time in motion picture history two feature pictures will be made at the same time with the same cast. Edward Jose, the Pathe producer, is the man who is working the miracle, and he is enabled to, since he is producing Kipling's "Light That Failed," and Gilbert Parker's "The Weavers," both of which demand desert scenes and battles in which Arabs are engaged.

The first of the A. H. Woods theatrical successes to be put into pictures will be "New York." George Fitzmaurice, the Pathe producer, has just started work upon it, with the famous Florence Reed as his leading woman. "New York" will be released as a "Gold Rooster Play."

BLIND COUPLE MARRIED.

Both Born Sightless, They Are Happy Now—Attracted by Her Voice.

Lafayette, Ind.—Without even having seen each other, love came to Ella Reeves of Lafayette and Frank J. Wagner of Terre Haute, and still without ever looking into each other's eyes they were quietly married here recently by Thomas Bridges, justice of the peace.

Both are blind and have been so from birth. Wagner is a piano tuner. He came here on a visit, met Miss Reeves and fell in love with her voice. He made the trip here for his marriage without assistance, and the blind husband and wife, after a short stay here, will journey alone to Terre Haute for residence.

The green Spanish coque feather on the turban blends beautifully with the soft tint of the skins.

Take a bone hook and crochet a row of single (s.) all around the edges, take a st in each ridge and widen at the rounded edges. For the border use the single skein. For the first row make 3 chain (ch) and fasten by s. in every alternate st of the edge. For the second row ch 3 and 2 s. in every 3 ch of the first row. For the last row make a shell of 1 stitch, 2 double (d.), 1 stitch in each 3 ch and a slip stitch between the two stitches of the second row. In making the last row from the front edge to back edge under the arm by the slip stitch in center of corresponding shells, join 12 shells in this manner. This makes a nice house jacket and can be worn under auto coats.

Cleansing of Salad Plants.

Too much care cannot be exercised in the cleansing of pot greens and salads. No one wishes to make a gravel bed of his stomach, and a careful looking over should be given to the greens and also to the washing of them to get visible dirt and especially any invisible infection, this particularly in the case of watercress which grows in streams that may be polluted by sewage or lettuce and celery grown in truck gardens and watered with any water that happens to come handy. [illegible] too, have [illegible] into [illegible], and the most thorough and painstaking care to clean all such plants should be an inviolable rule. When vegetables come into the house they should not be allowed to remain in the hot kitchen, but at once set in a cool place [illegible] a good grouted cellar [illegible] only a stuffy city flat wrap in linen or paper bags made for that purpose and put in the icebox.

WON BACK THE LOST HERITAGE

How a Shrewd Woman Settled a Family Feud.

Young Cuthbert Woods, when he went to the city to go into business, was warned by his father against a false step in marriage. Mr. Woods, Sr., concluding: "If you marry a girl with less than $10,000 in her own right I'll disown you. If the girl you marry has that amount I will give you $10,000." Notwithstanding this warning, Cuthbert walked right into a match with a poor girl. The first thing he knew of what was happening after meeting Lucy Briggs was that he had been enthralled.

One morning the elder Woods received a letter from his son announcing his marriage with Miss Lucy Briggs. His father made no reply to the letter, but, after giving himself time to cool, wrote a friend in the city to make inquiries as to his son's wife and report. The friend wrote that Miss Briggs had been a social belle; but, her father having died insolvent, she had previous to her marriage been preparing to earn her own living. On receipt of this letter Mr. Woods wrote his son reminding him of the warning given and stated that the boy could in the future shift for himself, supporting an extravagantly brought up wife as best he could.

Now, young Mrs. Woods did not feel satisfied to have brought this trouble on her husband, but she did not sit down and mourn over it, nor did she do what some women would have done—charge her husband with being the cause of it. She went so far as to assume the whole blame herself, declaring that no girl had any right to make trouble between parents and children by a marriage which was not even announced to take place.

"Cuthbert," she said one spring morning a few years after their marriage, "I need a rest. This doing housework and taking care of two children is breaking me down. I think I'd better go to Aunt Deborah's this summer for a visit."

"Certainly, my dear."

Meanwhile Mr. Winslow Woods was finding life tedious. Being a widower with no child save Cuthbert, he had always looked forward to his son and his son's family living with him. This dream had failed to materialize on account of his son's folly. Mr. Winslow Woods was but fifty, and he would have married again, but he lived in a quiet place among quiet, prosaic women, not one of whom was in the slightest degree tempting to him. But when, one morning, a stranger, Miss Aylesworth, called on him and, after announcing her intention to open school in the place, asked him to countenance the project, he saw something different.

Miss Aylesworth did not seem fitted for a schoolma'am, but the moment Mr. Woods looked into her pretty face and noticed her engaging manners it occurred to him that she would be just the person to take the place he had intended for his son's wife. He kept her chatting over her proposed school for an hour, promising to support the enterprise not only with influence, but with money, and invited her to call every day till her plans were matured. At the end of two weeks he proposed to her, but she called his attention to the fact that he knew nothing about her and would not consent till he had made inquiries. When he told her of his son she declared that she would never marry the father without the son's consent. This broke off negotiations for a few days, but Mr. Wood had set his heart on Miss Aylesworth and finally consented as a preliminary move to send for his son and patch up a reconciliation. This accomplished, Miss Aylesworth would furnish her credentials.

One day Cuthbert Woods, who was toiling in the city, while his wife and babies were in the country, received a letter from his father to come to him. Cuthbert hopefully wrote his wife of the invitation and took the first train.

"Cuthbert," said Mr. Woods, Sr., "by your folly I have been prevented, as I always hoped, from having you and your wife with me in my old age. Fortune has given me an opportunity to break my loneliness. A young woman—rather young for me, I admit—is willing to marry me. At her request I am going to be reconciled to you. She has made no such request as to your wife, whom I still do not care to meet. I will, however, from the day of my marriage allow you $1,000 a year."

Half a loaf is better than none, and Cuthbert, for the sake of his wornout wife, yielded a dissatisfied consent.

"And now," said his father, "I wish you to meet the noble lady who has effected this reconciliation." He opened a door and announced, "Miss Aylesworth, my intended wife!"

To his surprise, his son stood for a moment struck dumb with astonishment, then took his father's intended wife in his arms. Then to his father he announced in his turn, "My wife!"

Mr. Woods, Sr., having a logical mind, concluded that if "Miss Aylesworth" was good enough to run his house as his wife she was good enough to run it as his son's wife. The lady had not spoken in the town of her matrimonial project, and her mouth was sealed by [illegible] son's family in winter in the city, and his son's family should live with him in summer in the country.

For Young Folks

For many months the disabled soldiers of France have been making dolls, singly and in groups, and they have been aided by the artists made destitute by the war. Now these dolls have come to America, more than 10,000 of them, and they are to be exhibited and sold in the largest cities for the benefit of the war sufferers. The first exhibition was held in New York city and was highly successful. Soldiers' Toyland, as the exhibit is called, is made up of a wonderful display of the most beautiful dolls imaginable, and the little folks of society were present to admire and help along the cause of charity. The little girl in the picture is Miss [illegible] and she sold flowers to aid the poor children of France. On the whole the display is an amusing one, and as many of the groups and dolls are based on historical personages and scenes it is also of educational value.

New Year's in Scotland.

On the morning of New Year's eve in certain small towns of Scotland the children take great pleasure in playing "hogmanay," a game as peculiar as its name sounds. Just read for yourself and see.

First, the little boys and girls wrap themselves in large sheets, so wound around them that a huge pocket is formed right over their little stomachs. Then they stroll along the streets in little bands and call at the homes of the wealthier people, asking for a dole of wheaten bread.

Invariably each child is given a piece of oatcake, which is known as his "hogmanay." Needless to say, the good women of the households have anticipated such visits from the children and have cooked large quantities of the cake in readiness for their coming.

Hidden Sweets.

The name of a candy filling or flavoring is concealed in each of these sentences:

1. For this soup you need pepper; mint, too, is excellent for flavoring.
2. I was very sorry to find Donovan ill and very weak.
3. I call my dog Choco. Later I will explain why.
4. A subject of which I am very fond, anthropology, keeps me busy.
5. If you need a piano U. Gates has them for sale.
6. Had Marius and Cinna money when they ruled Rome?

Answers.—1, peppermint; 2, vanilla; 3, chocolate; 4, fondant; 5, nougat; 6, cinnamon.

Remarks by Mrs. Needle.

"I just wanted to remind you girls that Christmas is coming. It seems a long way off, but my sharp eye tells me that it is not so far off as it seems. Santa Claus and I think it would be a fine thing to make the dolls a whole new outfit for Christmas. Don't you think that would be fun? And the next rainy afternoon that comes along let's get the doll's grandmothers to cut out a set of underwear. Threads and thimbles, I can hardly wait to begin!"

Rigmarole.

A very amusing game is called rigmarole. One person starts telling a story and stops in the middle of a sentence in an interesting or exciting part. The one on the beginner's left continues, and so on until all have had a turn. It creates a lot of fun when the players have good imaginations. Each may have a given time to tell his or her part.

HER LOVE AND FROGS

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The Swamp farm, as it was called, was situated four miles out of Dayton and was owned by the Widow Bliss.

The tin peddler, the sewing machine agent, the book canvasser, the patent right man and many others who came that way saw, admired and were ready to love the owner of the Swamp farm. She admitted to herself that it might be better if she had a good husband, but she had a "nay" for all these men except one. He was a Mr. William Burton. He was a man just about her age and ranked as an old bachelor. Mr. Burton didn't begin as most of the others had. He had the sense to admire the widow without telling her that he admired.

Mr. Burton could talk of soils, crops, swamps, the weather and a hundred other things and never let a hint fall that he intended some day to talk of love and matrimony. The widow mentally pitied him for this, and yet she felt a bit piqued.

Mr. Burton was a surveyor, and his duties called him into the neighborhood of the Swamp farm about once a week. He could probably have made it once in two weeks and perhaps once in four, but it's none of our business. Along about Wednesday in every week the widow would look out of the front door and see Mr. Burton surveying or pretending to. He would look up by accident and see her standing there and would be invited in to drink a glass of fresh buttermilk.

This thing had gone on for a long, long time when he called one day, not to survey her garden, but to sit in the house and talk.

"Widow, I have been coming here a long time," he began.

"And it has tired you out?" she laughed in reply.

"Not a bit. I came today to ask you to be my wife."

"Mr. Burton," replied the widow, "I made up my mind about this marriage question quite a long time ago. I shall marry the man who can tell me how to make money out of my old swamp. When I am sure that he has told me right he may bring in the preacher."

"That old swamp has been a bleak spot for fifty years," he said after a time. "By the way, you don't own all the swamp, do you?"

"No. There's twenty-eight acres of it that belong to Mr. Cooper, but he can't do anything more with his part than I can with mine."

Mr. Burton walked down to the edge of the swamp and back again, and then he sat down and took his head in his hands and thought and thought. By and by he looked up with a bright smile on his face and said:

"Mrs. Bliss, I have got it. I have solved the problem. You are to turn that swamp into a frog farm!"

"Gracious me, but whoever heard of such a thing?" she exclaimed.

"Lots of folks have heard of it. There are half a dozen men in this state who are raising frogs for the market and making a heap of money out of it."

"But I never heard of any one eating frogs," persisted the widow. "Would any one in Dayton eat a frog, much less buy one?

"Not in Dayton," he laughed, "but in New York. They are on the bills of fare at most hotels and restaurants and are considered a great delicacy. They eat only the hind legs."

It was a week later that men and boys called at the Swamp farm with pails and baskets and paper bags.

When the widow had bought 600 big and little frogs and paid out so much money that she had to let her taxes slip by she went down to the swamp one morning to have a look at her "live stock."

Not a frog was in sight this morning, not a big one or a little one. That swamp was absolutely without life.

The widow ran back to the house and arrived there just a minute before Mr. Burton appeared.

"I—I was going to send for you!" she gasped.

"What has happened?" he asked.

"Every frog has disappeared!"

"You don't say!"

"Come along and see for yourself."

He walked along down to the swamp with her, and she heard him chuckling as he walked. Instead of looking over the swamp to see if he could solve the problem he sat down on a log and began to laugh.

"What do you mean, Mr. Burton?" was almost demanded.

"I was to tell you how to make money out of this old swamp."

"Yes, you said you could, but it seems you have only shown me how to lose money instead."

"You are wrong, widow—you are wrong," said Mr. Burton. "You see, there were twenty-eight acres which you didn't own. I bought them. When you had 600 frogs on your side of the swamp I threw a lot of frog food upon my side. Last night your 600 came over the line. They are now my property."

The widow looked at him with [illegible] and indignation.

"Oh, don't look that way," he laughed. "I am now going to tell you how you may make the money."

"How—how"— she stammered.

"Why, marry the man who owns the [illegible]

She not only made money out of the frog farm, but she got a good husband besides, and that is something that money cannot buy.

CO-ED'S HUBBY WAS "MADE TO ORDER"

He Followed Every Rule Laid Down by Her.

Evanston, Ill.—Mrs. Howard Osborn, college bride of Northwestern university, always said if she married at all she'd marry a model man. Having no respect for what modern civilization is producing in the way of manly perfection, she proceeded to model a man after her own liking.

Result: She's now the bride of a handsome young collegian, first in athletics, first in scholarship, first in the hearts of his fellow students at Northwestern.

The college bride's plan has Mrs. E. H. Harriman's million dollar scheme for perfecting the human race beaten by a whole generation. Mrs. Harriman's perfect man will not arrive until 1980; Mrs. Osborn's is a 1915 model. And he owes his model character not to science, but to romance.

When Osborn came from Coldwater, Mich., to Northwestern university to [illegible] the first co-ed he became interested in was Mildred Lamke. Mildred didn't knit him a rose colored tie, nor did she embroider college pennants for him, but she did take a great interest in his diet, in his manner of living and his plan of study.

The very first present she gave him—three days after their first meeting—was this set of rules:

Rise at 6 in the morning.

Cold shower bath and exercise every morning.

Breakfast on dry toast and coffee.

Pay close attention to co-eds.

No smoking, no drinking, no loafing, no overeating.

Sleep eight hours out of twenty-four.

Practice daily in athletic field.

Howard followed every rule faithfully for four years. When he was graduated last June he had a gold medal for athletics, a gold medal for scholarship, several medals for minor achievements—and the most popular girl in college for his promised bride.

Beginning Right.

[illegible]

That whatever we might do
On the first day, sure as shootin',
We would do the whole year through.

An' I saw the chance was splendid
To do something right away
[illegible]

An' on New Year's, startin' square,
I got up soon as 'twas light
[illegible]
[illegible] always have them right.

The following advertisements are reprinted with the thought that the messages they contain will prove particularly interesting during the Holiday Season. CHRISTMAS is a good time to start those in whom one is interested in the habit of Systematic Saving, which is the first step toward financial independence and character building; you can do this by presenting them with a savings account or one of the receipts issued by The Electric Co., which carry interest at 6% and when the partial payments are completed can be converted into perferred stock which is paying dividends at the rate of 7%.

When you give such a present, accompany it with the suggestion that the recipient SAVE FOR A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

The Electric Company has sold to investors all of its perferred stock. This offering is made possible because one of those interested in The Electric Co., is buying stock of shareholders who live at a distance at $105. per share for the $100. perferred stock, in order to re-sell it in Fulton at $100. per share and $10. per share. This is done because it is felt to be mutually advantageous that the customers and neighbors of the Company have an opportunity to buy its perferred stock.

Under these conditions, at the present time we are unable to promise stock enough to satisfy everybody. Preference will be given first to the smallest subscriptions, and we would rather sell $10. shares than $100. shares.

WE WISH ALL OUR NEIGHBORS THE COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.

XMAS GIFTS

Those who are puzzled by this problem will find a solution in our six-seven per cent Preferred Stock certificates—$10. and upwards. Or, in our receipts, which carry six per cent interest and are issued for one dollar and upwards.

The logical investment at this time is in public utilities. They have shown their ability to maintain earnings despite depression in many other lines of business, because they minister to many different people and to the power needs of many different lines of business.

You can find nothing sounder than our preferred stock certificates now yielding 7 per cent. Why not invest part of your money in home stock, after first getting full information as to what it is paying and then keep track of it.

THERE are many ways to EARN money. There is one way to have money,—SAVE it.

INTEREST RATES

are tending downward. We still have some Preferred stock certificates on which dividends are being paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

The human being was created for one purpose only: "To live forever happy afterwards." Bearing this in mind we must come to the conclusion that quite a number of us are not even trying to accomplish this. The man with all his treasures, that he could not spend alone, if he wished to and who is deaf, when called upon for the sake of HUMANITY, is one of the poorest specimens we know of, and it is a mere IMPOSSIBILITY for him to live happy forever after.

Like the famous expression: "There shall be light" so declare we today "There shall be a different spirit in the people of Fulton, before very long." Watch us; see us fight, but rest assured that WE ARE GOING TO WIN, no matter if all the SO CALLED "knockers" stand on their head and work overtime to defeat us. Remember that we announced that we had for sale ONE MILLION HORSE-POWER OF ENERGY and you shall have to go some, my dear fellows to win out, because you can't fight PUBLIC SENTIMENT and the leaders of YESTERDAY will be down and outers tomorrow.

FULTON, UNTIL THE LAST DITCH; FULTON, UNTIL THE MOMENT WE CANNOT BREATHE ANY LONGER! FULTON, UNTIL THE MOMENT OF KNOCKERS—JUDGMENT! FULTON, ALL THE TIME.

Come on out in the open, you knockers, you indifferent ones. We are laughing till our sides are getting sore, when we see you walk about, to try to knock us down and all of you, the entire army of you, could not even turn one of our hairs gray; you have not the brains to do it and your sentiments are of the wrong kind.

* * *

The fellow who acted like a raving maniac the other day, when we WERE DEFENDING THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE OF FULTON, because that is our SACRED duty, showed that he did not have the right spirit and he should pack his trunk and quit. He is a poor citizen.

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce is the ONE organization for the rich and the poor. If you only would come in and tell us your troubles, you will find the officers willing to take the matter up; investigate it, appoint special committees to work out plans and you will never KNOCK us again. In fact you will become a BOOSTER.

Million More Men Wanted—Premier to House of Commons

London—Premier Asquith made his long-expected statement on the Allies' military position in the House of Commons today in connection with the introduction of a "supplementary estimate" providing for the raising of the numerical strength of the British army from three million to four million men. The House was crowded.

The prime minister declared that although thhe British fighting forces in the various theaters now amount to more than 1,250,000 men on the war's demands were such as necessitated calling out the [illegible]

[illegible] or opposing conscription, John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, at the close of Mr. Asquith's speech, flung a bomb shell by declaring that the Nationalists would oppose conscription by every means in their power. John Dillion, followed with a severe arraignment of the British war leadership, inquiring: "What is the use of sending out more troops to be led by men like those responsible for thhe Suvia Bay and Anzac failures?"

The Premier's statement of the need of the army for "every man" included a warm tribut to the overseas soldiers, and he took pains to mention particularly "the men eager to be attested who have made application from far-distanct places—Hong Kong, Rhodesia, California, adding.

"This has been a commentary on the lethargy of some of those here at home."

A large proportion of thew omitted, the Premier said, was able to return to duty, but in addition to keeping up the present armies to their nominal strength, men were wanted for new formations and to increase the aggregate of Great Britain's fighting forces. Every available man should be put in the field, so far as was consistent withp rovision for national necessities, including munitions and the vast field of employment upon the continued working of whict thhe national life depended.

Referring to the Derby scheme, Mr. Asquith said the report from Lord Derby had been sent to him only Monday evening and was now being considered by the members of the Cabinet. Therefore, any statement regarding theg overnment policy on this subject must be deferred. He indicated, howvr, that anothr chance would be given those who had not yet responded.

Turning to the military situation, the Premier said that the retirement from the Dardanelles positions—with the notable exception of thep osition at the tip of the peninsula—had been taken on the advice of General Monro and Earl Kitchener.

Thousands Ready to Greet Immense Christmas Tree

Tonight at 7:45 o'clock Fulton's First Municipal Christmas Tree will be ablaze with glory. At the stroke of the hour the lights will be turned on and the voices of the hundreds gathered will lift in that old song of praise, "Joy to the World."

Everywhere throughout the city today were heard expressions of pleasure regarding the tree. Invitations by the hundreds have been sent into the rural districts and, taken altogether, the gathering promises to be one of the largest ever held in Fulton. Hundreds of packages are wrapped and ready to be delivered into scores of eager, [illegible] has grown cold, and selfish and tired, let him stand near the door where the little feet pass the threshold for gifts and watch the light in the little faces; it will give something money cannot buy; the offerings of gold, frankincese and myrrh will again be visualized.

Withal let it go on record that this great manifestation tonight of Life and Love is the City of Fulton—not a few individuals, but the city, a united people, lifting one voice to the starry heights in a song of praise such as the shepherds of old did know.

The program for the exercises will be found in another column of today's publication. A few changes have been made over the first arrangements.

Copies of the words of the carols to be sung, and in which every one is expected to join will be distributed through the crowd that no one need fail to join his voice.

After the exercises the children will march to the Chamber of Commerce rooms where the gifts will be distributed to them.

POLICE COURT CASES BAFFLE, SAYS ATTORNEY

"Henry Ford's attempted task of ending the war is easier than trying to straighten out some of the Police Court cases," were the words this morning of Attorney Somers, indefending Floyd Eckert, who was arrested on a charge of public intoxication preferred by Milan Hubbard. Judge Wilson listened to a number of witnesses, including the defendant, plaintiff and Mrs. Hubbard. Eckert was not sentenced.

FULTON MAY BE CENTER OF SQUASH UNIVERSE

This section may become the hub of the squash universe if one may judge from the home grown specimen on exhibit at the Frank Massaro grocery. This viney product measures by its greater diameter two and one-half feet, and the lesser diametrical measurement is one and one-half feet. The weight is fifty pounds.

The squash is said to be the largest ever produced in Oswego county. It was grown ty Santa Leapto, an Italian farmer at South Granby. Mr. Leapto says that the specimen in Massaro's possession is one of the smallest in hi whole crop. Thel arget must be a "whopper."

CONGRESS TO BE LENIENT TO WORD GT. BRITAIN

Washington—Vigorous and aggresive opposition in Congress to the present foreign policy today confronted the administration in its efforts to handle the tangled international situation. Secretary of State Lansing and other executive heads of the administration have been told that powerful Democratic interests in both the Senate and the House have settled upon [illegible] points.

DIVISION OF TOWN TO GET LOCAL ATTENTION

The Chamber of Commerce is in receipt of a letter sent by the Columbia Mills, Inc., of Minetto, asking for an expression of opinion of the question of dividing the Town of Oswego. The subject will be discussed at a directors' meeting to be held tomorrow evening.

The question of dividing the town may concern a large number of persons here, especially, provided the contemplated improvements to the mill are made. If the improvement plan is carried out it is estimated that the mill at Minetto will employ at least 1500 persons, many of whom will find homes in this city.

LITTLE JOE HOPPING BOBS WAS INJURED

Jos Toparso, 8, of Hart street was injured this morning in South First st., when a heavy sleigh from the Gage Mill ran over his arm and leg. several companions, were endeavoring to "hop the bob" at the side and losing his hold, he fell between the front and rear runners. Fortunately, the sleigh was not loaded and the injuries he suffered were only slight.

ENEMIES WITHIN

It is gratifying to receive the official assurance of the German Government, emphatically given to Germans abroad, to German-American citizens of the United States, and to the America people, that "whoever is guilty of conduct tending to associate the German cause with lawlessness of thought, suggestion or deed against life, property and order in the United States is in fact an enemy of that very cause and a source of embarrassment to the German Government, notwithstanding anything he or they may believe to the contrary." At once that materially enlarges the number of enemies of the German cause, for it cannot be denied that there are many persons in this country, some of them citizens of the United States, who, some of them in suggestion or deed, others in thought and sympathy, have very distinctly associated the German cause with these forms of lawlessness. It will now be possible, and on the highest authority, to denounce them not only as enemies of Ger- our peace and neutrality, but as enemies of Germany.—New York Times

GERMANY'S DISCLAIMER

In a communication to the New York Times, the German government denies in emphatic terms that it gives or has given army countenance or sanction to promotion of the German cause in the United States by illegal acts, and declares that those who perpetrate such acts are enemies of Germany and a source of embarrassment to the German government, "notwithstanding anything he or they may say to the contrary."

This statement is manifestly made in reference to the charges of a plot to destroy the Welland Canal as the result of a conspiracy alleged to have been hatched in this country, the charges having been followed by arrests.

That in denying any association with lawless acts in the United States Germany does not wait for the channels of official communication, but speaks through a New York newspaper, may be a technical irregularity, but it shows a desire to bring the German attitude as quickly before the American public as possible. This is conciliatory to American feeling, and it is well to remember in connection with Germany's statement, that in a war so vast as the one that is raging, there will inevitably be many desperate, irresponsible or criminal-minded persons, who will seek to throw the responsibility of their own actions on the government of one or another of the belligerents.

Germany's disclaimer of any official or actual countenance to such miscreants is assuredly entitled to be heard, and to have the weight attached to it which belongs to any announcement from governmental sources.—Buffalo Times.

THE QUIRK

"The Magic Skin" is the title of a beautiful five-part Edison drama founded on the famous story of Honoré de Balzac, to be offered as the leading attraction at the Quirk theater today.

"The Magic Skin," as its name and original source of inspiration implies, is a mystic tale very unusual and much out of the beaten path of [illegible]. There is much of the French [illegible] atmosphere in the [illegible] [illegible] story. The Bacchanalian dances and midnight revelries of the artist, Valentine, while in the height of the ephemeral pleasures purchased by his bargain with Mephistopheles are cleverly and convincingly done.

For the role of the artist, Ralph Valentine, that well known tragedian, [illegible] [illegible] was obtained. He [illegible] [illegible] "The Magic Skin" will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

LOOKING TO THE EAST

Mr. Victor C. Lewis, mayor-elect, will be inaugurated mayor of this city in a very few days. Mr. Lewis will begin the term of his office as mayor with the sincere good wishes of every citizen of the city without regard to party.

Mr. Lewis has a great opportunity. He has the opportunity to render the people of this city great and conspicuous service. There probably never was a time when the people of this city were so much in need of an honest and courageous mayor to restore city affairs to a basis of business efficiency and economy. The last few years of city government have demoralized nearly every department of public business, and for proof of this statement one has but to turn to the statement issued by the auditor engaged by the present administration which shows that the funds of one department have been transferred to other departments where relief was needed, the relief having to come from somewhere. Any old port in a storm.

The work of correcting the evils of former administrations, the work of restoring economical and efficient government in this city is a task fit for any big business man and we sincerely hope and believe that Mr. Lewis will prove himself the man for the emergency. His record as a business man and a candidate for office proves that he has the courage of his convictions and the ability to master some of the problems that will confront him, in the next two years. One of the problems to confront him is the desire of every intelligent and patriotic citizen of this city to have City Hall business affairs handled in a clean and efficient manner; that funds shall not be tampered with as in the past and made to show deficits—acts declared by the City Charter to be illegal.

TOYS!

The Man stood looking into the distance. The shawl that covered his shoulders was a common cloak, common in those days. How strange it would look now!

The face of the Man was pale, and down through his cheeks sorrow had carved two deep-graven channels. When he would meet a child he would smile, and then these channels seemed to change to paths of tenderness.

The nation was looking to him for the end of it all. A child had asked this Man to buy it some soldiers—toy soldiers. And the Man left the big house, waded through the wet with his low shoes, to a toy-shop. The request of that lisping little Lincoln was to be respected by the President.

Finally the Man found, at almost the end of the street, a German toy-maker—a wounded German soldier, making toys. A Russian bullet had found a fighter, and drove the German patriot from the field. He had crossed the ocean to get relief from it all.

The Man saw on the counter, in that little German toyshop, gray soldiers, blue soldiers, flags, cannon, infantry, cavalry, and all the trappings in tin and wood, all the schemes, in miniature, that go to murder.

Almost unconsciously the Man tried to place a general, a gaudy general, up front; but the toy soldier would not stand alone.

The German toy-maker had fought with Napoleon, and he said: "Here, try this little general. He will stand where you place him."

There was a sudden light in the Man's sad eyes—a glance of understanding. He had found a general that would stand alone.

Months afterwards the Man returned to the same shop and impatiently asked for all the soldiers, all the cannon and all the men on hand; he must have more soldiers, more men, to end it all. He had found the general.—The Silent Partner.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington.—War order corporations, the credit for which Secretary Redfield vainly endeavors to attach to the Democratic Administration, have multiplied exceedingly during the ten months of the present year ended October last. The most remarkable increase is in the Eastern States, where over forty new companies have been formed to manufacture war munitions, with captital aggregating $53,935,000. This does not include four large concerns which have recently been forced to new financing in order to accommodate the large rush of business from abroad, whose aggregate capital as a result of this refinancing amounts to $354,000,000.

Considering those corporations whose capital amounts to $100,000 or over, eighteen are credited to Delaware, combined capital $37,150,000. Added to these are the DuPont DeNemours Co., which is refinanced with $240,000,000 capital; the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Company, capital $100,000,000, and the DuPont Securities Co., capital $100,000,000.

Fifteen new companies are credited to New York State, combined capital $4,185,000, added to which is the Submarine Boat Corporation, refinanced with a capital of $4,000,000. In Massachusetts six companies have been formed, combined capital $10,050,000. In Maine, one, capital $2,000,000. In New Jersey, three, combined capital $500,000. The munitions of war to be manufactured and sent abroad by these companies including guns, rifles, ordnance, explosives of all kinds, and aircraft.

But a number of other corporations have come into being, indirectly as a result of the war. They are the companies which have been organized for the manufacture and distribution of chemicals, drugs and dyes, and which find in the European war that protection to American manufactures which a free-trade Democracy denied them.

The records show that of these companies capitalized at $100,000 or over, fifty-eight have been organized during the ten months ended October last, total capital aggregating $53,790,000. Here, again, Delaware takes the lead. Twenty-five corporations of this class are credited to this state, combined capital $35,900,000. Thirteen are credited to New York, combined capital $10,860,000. Ten to New Jersey, combined capital $1,450,000. Three to Pennsylvania, combined capital $2,900,000. Three to Maine, combined capital $1,700,000. Two to West Virginia, combined capital $600,000, and one to Massachusetts, capital $280,000.

Gary, Indiana, has also felt the results of the war. Extensions and new plants in that town costing $12,000,000, are either completed or in process of construction. They will give employment to 6,500 men when completed, and several thousands of men will be employed in their construction.

With these huge expansions in industries, due to the war, the stimulus of which thrills every artery of the country's trade, what wonder is it that times are looking up? But what part has President Wilson, or Secretary McAdoo, or Secretary Redfield had to do in it? They have merely attempted to hide the real issues behind the European warclouds.

FARM BUREAUS AND GOOD SENSE

Cornell Man Says the Rare Quailty Does Not Always Obtain in Their Conduct.

In outlining the ideals for farm bureau activities, Dean Beverly T. Galloway, at the meeting of farm bureau managers, held at Cornell recently, said that the fundamental principles are applicable everywhere. "We should get away," he said, "from the old idea of state lines, county lines, of any other artificial boundaries, which is nothing more than the recrudescene of individualism, born of frontier life and frontier conditions. Men touching elbows, and there are no divisional lines in the brotherhood of man."

Of the farm bureau of the future, he said:

Growth Through Service

"Communities are much like individuals. No individual can grow unless he serves. No community can grow economically, socially, morally or ethically unless it is aroused to the need of service. Growth, to be permanent, must come from within, and the only way it can come from within is for the people who constitute it to move, to act, to do something for the common good. In the old days when we selected a good farmer, because he was a good farmer, to go out and help other farmers, the most surprised man was the good farmer himself, for he found at once that the mere fact of his helping other farmers helped him as much or more than it did his neighbors. If farm bureau work is to be permanent, if it is to accomplish its aims economically, socially, and, I might almost say, morally and ethically, it must be an outgrowth of local spirit, wisely guided, but not directed or dominated by any agencies from without.

"The federal government, the state governments, and other agencies, public and private, are uniting and co-operating to place in the hands of the local communities all those things that will be most helpful in helping them to help themselves. This will mean funds, advice, sympathy, support and more important than all, a nation-wide united and consistent idealism which is found in the broad and generous meaning of the word 'co-operation.' Co-operation for what? Not for bureaucratic or centralized control or direction, not for a system that will quicken social consciousness and make our people givers. This is the real meaning of the word co-operation as it was written into the Lever Bill, and, while we cannot expect to attain the high ideals, as there expressed, all at once, we can work toward them with all the zeal at our command.

The Successful Leader

"We see the farm bureau work of the future wisely guided and directed by local leaders with vision, with sound ideals, and with that most rare, and uncommon thing, common sense. These leaders must be in the community and of the community they serve. If the leader is successful in becoming an integral part of the community, if he really deserves it, learns it, and loves it, the rest will not be difficult. He should never lose sight of thef act that he is the crystallizing agent whose job it is to bring thef orces together for the purpose of molding them for the common good, and that self-effacement is the most potent force of all in accomplishing the results to be desired.

"The greatest pleasure and satisfaction can come to anyone engaged in ganizational work, is the pleasure of standing away on the side lines, completely off the stage and quietly watching results unfold themselves—results which he alone may know are due in some part, largeo r small, to his efforts.

The Place of the Home

"And finally, we see the farm bureau work of thef uture a rounded out work reaching not only into the things that affect the farmer, such as his crops, his livestock, and his markets, but into the home. Here we men are on delicate grround, so delicate in fact that we must step aside and give place to thew omen, who for all time have been the guardians and keepers of the home. We, therefore, see woman's work in the home and for the home an integral and intimate part of future farm bureau activities. I can see no need for separate machinery, or separate organization for this type of work.

"In New York State, we are now ready for three or four farm bureau projects for work in thef arm home. The communities themselves are ready to do theih share and are awake to the need of the work, trained leaders can be secured, the subject matter is sufficiently organized to make it available and useful, and certain quite definite means of approach have been worked out. Food, clothing and housing will no doubt constitute the essentials in this work for some time. More vital still is the problem of the children. What a fatuous theory that holds because a woman is aw oman she should know all about how to care for children, how to protect them against the many ills to which they are subject. The men cannot even depenrd upon themselves in the matter of looking after the ills of their live stock. No, let us look forward to a future farm bureau work, that to quote an earnest laborer in the field,, 'should give us in every county, or in every rural community, two kinds of workers—the visiting nurse and the county representative—women of broad education, broad sympathies, with a keen knowledge of the subjects to be taught, and how to teach them, women to whom the farm woman should feel she could go for sympathy and counsel, women who are physically strong enough to stand hardships of poor railroads and poor hotels, women who will be glad to be the bearers of the gospel of better homes, better children, and a more contented and happier rural population.' "

A WOMAN'S FAVORITE among animals is a horse, and no wonder, for with one she can have a great deal of pleasure. All of our horses are so gentle and well-broken, that the most timid woman need have no fear in driving them. Why not take a drive these fine afternoons, and enjoy yourself?

TAXPAYERS CALL FOR DIVISION

Big Meeting Resulted in Passing Resolution Favoring Division of Oswego Town.

Yesterday's Oswego Times reports the mass meeting called to consider the division of Oswego town as follows:

About 200 people attended the taxpayers' meeting at Minetto last night to discuss the division of the Town of Oswego. It was regarded as a representative meeting of taxpayers of the eastern end of the town. W. R. Perry, chairman of the Minetto Improvement committee, presided. F. E. Cullen, representing the Columbia Mills, told briefly the intentions of the company, should the town be divided, and appealed to the property owners to favor the proposition for their own benefit. A resolution petitioning the Board of Supervisors to make the division was adopted.

Should the new town be formed, Mr. Cullen stated, the Columbia Mills, Inc., intend to centralize their eastern plant at Minetto and their western plant at Chicago. This would mean not only the building of a large shade cloth factory but also the constduction of a plant to manufacture the cotton cloth which is used as a base for the shade cloth, and the lace used for trimming.

Th new town is to be bounded by the Oswego City line the West Fifth street road, the Town of Granby and the Oswego river. This includes 1,440 acres against 20,357 acres remaining in the old town. The population of the new town will be 1,002, 2,153 remaining in Oswego town. The new town will have an assessed valuation of about $500,000 not including the proposed improvements.

Mr. Cullen showed from figures from other towns in this section that the expense of running the new town will easily be as low as at present and in all probability it will be less. Taxes in the new town will be no higher and the improvements for which the tax is levid will be made in such a small space that they will benefit practically the entire population.

At the meeting at Oswego Center, held by the opposition, the statement was made by a speaqer that the Columbia Mills intended to control the property and vote of the new town and secure the improvements they desire at the expense of the people. The company, itw as said, also wishes to control the water without paying anything for it. Mr. Cullen said that the statement was untrue, as before it is possible to make any improvement, over one-half of the property owners must petition for it, and, regardless of the valuation, one name is as good as another. Also that the tax for any improvement is levied on the benefited property only. The new town will have 240 taxpayers, 4 of them corporations, and only 37 employed by corporations.

As for controlling the vote, the Columbia Mills would be powerless should they desire to as only 57 of the 314 electors are employed in the mill.

A resolution that the Supervisors be petitioned to divide the Town of Oswego as suggested was made, seconded and carried unanimously.

A meeting of the opposition will be held in Grange Hall at Southwest Oswego tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

COUNTY TAX RATE GOES UP THIRTY CENTS

Oswego—The county tax rate for the city of Oswego in 1916 was announced yesterday at $1.64 per $100 of valuation. The rate this year for tax collected in January, 1915, was $1.34 per $100. The rate includes the levies for the State tax, for county purposes and for municipal matters.

The levies are as follows:

City levies, for general municipal purposes, $25,000; water service commission, $5,000; water bonds and interest, $10,000; city abstract, $12,893.17; N. Y. & Midland bonds, $26,100; Lake Ontario Shore bonds, $ 4,550; county levy, $109,250.34; State tax, $28,837.75; tax deeds, $348.19; cancellations assumed, $1,221.79.

The combined city and county ratios for 1915 were $3.30, the city rate being $1.96 and the county rate, $1.34; with the county rate for 1915 thirty cents higher than last year, it is believed the combined rate for 1916 will be even higher than for 1915.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

KODAK

—the Family Gift

How often you have thought "Oh, if we only had a picture of the baby just as she looks now."—or the sturdy four-year old boy with his first sled. Then there are the family parties, and the young folks' jollifications, all the year round, that a snap-shot would bring to mind months and years afterwards. What is more precious than a smile?—and how often you will laugh over some funny incident preserved by the Kodak.

Don't let this Christmas pass by without the gift of a Kodak to some member of your family, as inexpensive or as costly as you please, but always invaluable.

LOUIS MARSHALL SEEKS BIG FUND FOR JEWS

New York—A fund of $5,000,000 must be raised at once by the Jews of the United States in order to bring effective relief to Jewish war sufferers in Europe, according to Mr. Louis Marshall, chairman of the American Jewish RRelief Committee, who will preside at am ass meeting in Carnegie Hall tonight at which the committee's 1916 campaign wil be launched. Mr. Thomas R. Marshall, vice president; Mayor Mitchell, Bishop David H. Greer and many others will speak

There were reports yesterday that several large cities already had been promised to the committee on condition that $1,000,000 was raised within the next few weeks

Contributions received yesterday by Mrs. Whitney Warren ,treasurer of the Second National Fund, No. 16 East Forty-seventh street, for the relief of the destitute women and children of France and the Belgian refugees amounted to $33, making the total $119,459.45. The donors were Mr. A. C. Bradley, $2; Lieutenant Colonel and Mrs. Arthur W. Yates, $25; Miss Mary Dallas Street, $1, and Captain aPtrick Haston, $5

Among the contributions received by the Lafayette Fund yesterday was one of $400 from Southern California the proceeds of a Lafayette concert given by the California committee; and also thirty aluminum rings made by French soldiers in the trenches from fragments of shells from German guns.

Mrs. Albert Lee Andrews of Crestwood, N. Y., yesterday sent a telegram to Mr. Josephus Daniels, secretary of the Navy, charging the despatch of a battle ship to convoy food and clothing to the Serbians and Albanians.

The Dollar Christmas Fund, of which Mr. Henry Clews is treasurer, exceeds $50,000 and of this amount nearly $3,000 was received yesterday.

GREEKS BATTLE WITH BULGARS IN ALBAINA

London—Persistent reports of a Greco-Bulgarian encounter, resulting from a Bulgarian surprise attack, have been cleared up by the Greek statement that the encounter took place in Albanian territory: No one wask illed and few were wounded. Order was restored promptly and an amicable inquiry is proceeding.

It is announced from Paris that no enemy detachment has crossed the Greek frontier. Meanwhile work on the defensive lines around Salonica. Greek villages in the neighborhood of the lines are being evacuted by the population.

Greek military circles declare they are convinced the forces opposing the Allies will not attempt to cross the frontier, the Bulgarians because they realize the danger of provoking Greece, the Germans because they are grateful for Greek neutrality and because they realize the tremendous cost which the enterprise would entail.

The total of British casualties resulting from the Salonica expedition into Serbia was only 1,278.

These figures were given in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by Mr. Harold J. Tennart, Parliamentary Under Secretary for War. Mr. Tennant said that of the total only one officer and eighty-five men of otherr anks had been killed.

Singing the Praise of Chamberlain's Tablets

Mrs. Ernest Crooks, Camillus, N. Y., says, "I have been singing the praise of Chamberlain's Tablets in the ears of my neighbors and friends ever since I used them about five years ago. Prior to that I had suffered a good deal from indigestion, sick headache and biliousness due to a torpid liver. Chamberlain's Tablets acted like magic, affording me quick relief. After using two or three bottles of them I am in perfect health."

A Very Old Rule.

The oldest mathematic book in the world is believed to be the "Papyrus Rhind" in the British museum, professed to have been written by Ahmes, a scribe of King Ra-a-us, about the period between 2000 and 1700 B. C. This "Papyrus Rhind" was translated by Eisenlohr of Leipsig, and it was found to contain a rule for making a square equal in area to a given circle. It was not put forth as an original discovery, but as the transcript of a treatise 500 years older still, which sends us back to approximately 2500 B. C., when Egyptian mathematicians solved, or thought they had solved, the problem of squaring the circle.

Christmas Fun On a Warship

"IF I can't be at my own home," remarked a navy officer the other day, "I'd rather spend the holiday season on a vessel down in the Caribbean than in the greatest city of the land. Fun? Why, you don't know what fun is until you come to one of our celebrations!"

He told of many such celebrations, beginning with a musical comedy given by the crew of a protected cruiser off a South American port, winding up with a Christmas tree. It was a big tree, too, one that anybody might have envied, and the sailors had made a trip ten miles inland to get it on the previous day. From every branch there hung gifts for the diners.

Just as the big tree was fastened into place there appeared through the high window a real Santa Claus.

Down a chimney-like opening he crawled, finally leaping upon the table with such force that half a dozen glasses went crashing to the floor. Amid the applause Santa Claus proceeded to award the presents.

FOUR LEGGED GIRL DEAD.

Little Virginia McDonald of Virginia Had Four Arms Also.

Harrisonburg, Va.—Virginia McDonald, a little girl with four legs and four arms, who for four years has been exhibited at fairs and other public places all over the eastern part of the United States, died recently at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon McDonald, near Lebanon church, Shenandoah county. The child was five years one mouth and nineteen days old. She was sick just two days with tonsilitis and membranous croup.

When several months old she was taken to Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, where physicians and medical scientists examined her. They decided that it would be impossible to operate on the child without causing death. There have been other persons born with four legs and four arms, but they did not live as long as the little Shenandoah girl. They died either at birth or soon thereafter, according to reports.

She leaves her parents and three little brothers, and also a large sum of money. Her father is a farmer.

CONFUSED BY FINAL "E."

Notified Her Brother Joined Marine Corps, She Thought He Was Dead.

Portland, Ore.—Never having used the final "e" in her own spelling of the word "corpse," Mrs. Marceline Germain of Donaldson, Mich., was prostrated with grief upon receipt of an official communication announcing the fact that her brother, Joseph Eli Jollicouer, had joined the United States marine corps and had named her as next of kin to be notified in case of death.

"If my brother is a corps of what did he die?" she wrote to Captain H. T. Swain, in charge of the local recruiting station of the United States marine corps, who had enlisted the man and was responsible for the notification.

The recruiting officer by return mail bade the [illegible] sister [illegible] mourning and assured her that the "corps" to which her brother had lately attached himself was the "livest" kind of an organization.

Nothing New.

"I see," said Bilkins, "that a French scientist has discovered a method for staving off old age."

"Well, what of it?" demanded Wilkins. "There's nothing new in that. A man can stave off old age by jumping off the Eiffel tower, or dropping a lighted match in a powder barrel while [illegible] on it, or by rocking the boat when he's out in the water, or by [illegible]ing over Niagara falls sitting [illegible] [illegible] the tree with their [illegible] over nothing."—Harper's Weekly.

Bath Robe of Fine French Flannel

Designed by Lane Bryant, New York.

FRENCH flannel is the material used in the making of this stylish bath robe. It is a fabric that makes up extremely well because, although not weighty, it is sufficiently warm to serve the purpose for which all bath robes are intended. The sailor collar, turnback cuffs and prettily shaped patch pockets are shell crochet bound and outlined with featherstitching in white silk. Featherstitching also outlines the raglan sleeves. The gown is shown in rose, copenhagen, blue, wistaria, gray and navy.

Skating is to rival dancing this winter, so the wise ones say, and skating costumes are already occupying feminine minds, although the weather man has given no assurance that there will be ice enough to warrant a special skating costume. One of the prettiest is of burnt orange duvetyn, with a tight band of skunk just below knee length. This can be unsnapped from the front panel, and, as the remainder of the skirt is shirred on elastic, there is enough "give" for the most enthusiastic skater. The Angora skating cap now shows a scarf extension, which can be wound about the neck above an Angora sweater coat to match.

Many new frocks and suits show separate shoulder capes, which can be removed to show a finished dress or suit. On a black suit of velvet such a cape is made of tailless ermine and covers a second cape of the velvet underneath. These are reminiscent of Puritan days.

• • •

Great quantities of tulle are being used on evening gowns not only for fashioning the gown, but for trimming purposes, in wisps of draperies, scarfs and in one gown as a train. A black and gold evening frock shows a wide piece of tulle caught across the back of the frock and held with jet bracelets to the wrists.

• • •

Ribbons have never before been used in such quantities. They are not ordered by the yard, but by the bolt, for several widths are employed on the same frock, while many frocks are mostly fashioned of ribbon. Hats, too, are many times trimmed only with ribbon.

• • •

Bodices are much, very much, on the basque order, fitted quite tightly with short flaring peplums and usually buttoned tight to the chin. Of course fur is the trimming par excellence, with much embroidery and metallic laces.

• • •

Fur and feathers are used in combination for hat trimming. Ostrich and ermine is a combination that is looked on with favor by the milliners. Ermine, by the bye, is seen this year with the tiny black tails.

• • •

Square shaped sailors are a novelty of the season, as are the mandarin hats, sporting tassels of oriental coloring, whether formed of beads or silk. Spangled trimming, especially in blue tones, is a popular scintillating embellishment for the semi-evening toilet.

Huge corsage flowers are occasionally worn in the front of the bodice at the waist line on evening frocks.

• • •

The skirts of afternoon frocks are fuller than those of suits, of course, and probably not quite so full as those of evening gowns, though it is a question whether one could possibly carry a skirt wider than six or seven yards even in the softest of satins or soiree silks.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Negligee Shirt For Men and Youths.

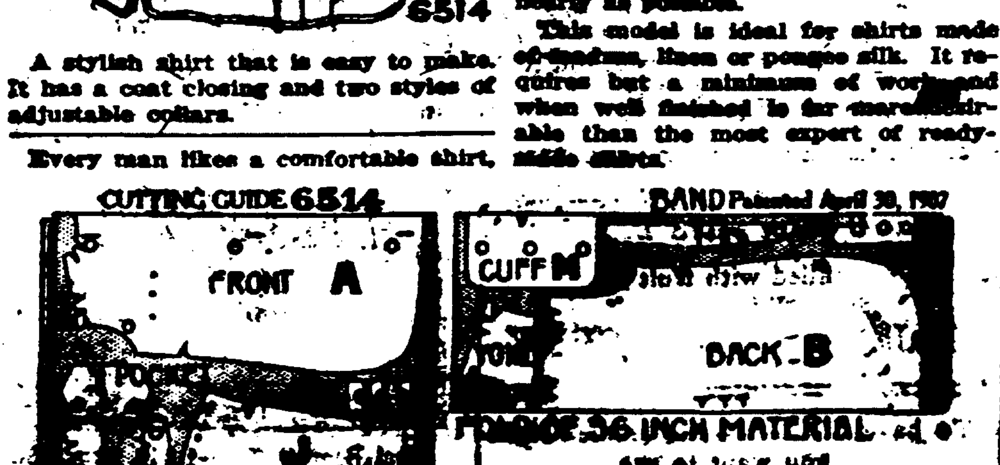
A stylish shirt that is easy to make. It has a coat closing and two styles of adjustable collars.

Every man likes a comfortable shirt, and here is a model that almost any home dressmaker can make with the perfection of a custom-made design if she follows directions carefully. In medium size the shirt requires 1½ yards 36-inch material. It will be necessary, as is shown by the cutting guide, to divide the material into two parts. One part is folded while the other is left open. On the open width of material are laid the collars, the sleeve, the pocket and the front, all a lengthwise thread. Of course the open width is doubled so that two sections can be cut at once. Be sure to place two right or two wrong sides together when using two widths of open material.

Now on the fold place the yoke, then directly to the right of it, the back. Opposite the yoke, on a lengthwise thread of the material is laid the cuff. The band and lap come next, both laid on a lengthwise thread of the goods.

If striped material is used, study the construction guide carefully and place the stripes so that they will match as nearly as possible.

This model is ideal for shirts made of madras, linen or pongee silk. It requires but a minimum of work and when well finished is far more desirable than the most expert of ready-made shirts.



Pictorial Review Shirt No. 6514. Sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 [illegible]

Santa Claus Up to Date.

Every year I am tempted to come out on a housetop and tell the young and self raising generation the truth about Santa Claus.

I believe it only right that the children should know Santa Claus no longer goes about in a dinky little sleigh, delivering toys down the chimneys. He simply couldn't do it if he tried. That kind of thing was all right when his business was small and he was younger than he is now. In those days he made the toys himself—glued even the little tails of the little toy sheep in place, stuck the little eyes on the tops of their little heads, painted the little bodies as different from the real things as he could and do it quick, and then, hitching up his six reindeers, delivered the whole batch before sunrise Christmas morning. It is different now.

Santa Claus is old, and all he does is to live on the profits of the business. The business now is run under the name of S. Claus & Co., and the firm has many workers—clerks, drivers and the rest. Some of the employees of this big firm have grown so careless that they miss little boys and girls who live in out of the way places. Old Santa Claus never did such a thing in his life.

If any of our young people are overlooked this year they must not blame Santa Claus. He is just as jolly and good as ever. They'll have to blame it on the new driver that looks after their section of the earth.

CHRISTMAS SALADS.

Delicious Combinations That the Homecomers Will Like.

Place two pieces of canned asparagus on a white lettuce leaf. Across the asparagus put two strips of sweet red pepper. Dress with French dressing, well seasoned with paprika.

Remove the top from a sweet red pepper and fill it with Camembert and cream cheese mashed together. Cut it in quarter inch slices. On each plate place a couple of lettuce leaves and on them put a thick slice of sweet, juicy orange. On this place a slice of the cheese stuffed pepper. Pour French dressing over it and serve.

Put a slice of pared tart apple on a lettuce leaf and on it place a thick slice of tomato, then another slice of apple and another of tomato. Top with a spoonful of mayonnaise.

Remove the pits from dates and stuff with cream cheese. On each plate put a slice of pineapple on a lettuce leaf. Add three stuffed dates, pour French dressing over and serve.

Add chopped pecans to cottage cheese and form into small balls. Serve three or four with each service of crisp lettuce dressed either with French or mayonnaise dressing.

On a piece of endive place alternately segments of orange from which the inner skin is removed, and similarly shaped pieces of tart apple. Dress with French dressing.

Avocados or alligator pears make a delicious salad cut in cubes and served with a well seasoned French dressing on crisp white lettuce leaves.

Three or four pieces of canned asparagus, drained and chilled, served on a lettuce leaf with French dressing, to which a chopped sweet green pepper has been added, make another good salad that is not much trouble.

Roast Duck.

For the roast duck or duckling, as the case may be, there is nothing nicer than a good savory bread stuffing, though many people like an oyster or some other fancy dressing. For the savory bread stuffing take the day before it is needed a loaf of baker's bread and with a sharp knife cut off very thinly the crust of the entire loaf. Then break the bread into pieces and put it into a square of cheesecloth, tie it up and hang it in the air.

When ready to make the stuffing crumb the bread fine and add to it the juice of a large onion, pepper, salt, a quarter pound of butter cut into small pieces, a teaspoonful of powdered sage, a dash of mace, a little sweet basil, a little sweet marjoram, a gill of cream and one beaten egg. Mix the dressing thoroughly; if it seems a little dry add nothing more, as the butter and meat juices will moisten it sufficiently.

A Sunny Morning Face.

A principle of psychology which every mother should know is that the last thought before going to sleep makes the deepest impression. The last thought is sure to be the first waking thought. A child should never be punished just before going to bed if you wish to create in him a joyous disposition. A happy bedtime will mean a sunny morning face.

No one can be at his best morally and spiritually unless he is at his best physically. No child can be improved morally by being injured physically. To send a child away from the table hungry or to send him supperless to bed is a relic of barbarism. A happy bedtime and a happy mealtime are the right of every child.

DIAGONAL GRACE.

THE BOYS' CHRISTMAS.

How These Difficult Members of the Family May Be Pleased.

Christmas books are a safe and valuable standby. A subscription to any of the several good young people's periodicals is in the same category. A scrap album, with an accompanying pair of clipping shears, suggests itself with these, as does a portfolio, diary or pocket memorandum.

A fountain pen or a screw pencil, with always and forever a good knife, is more of the stationer's stock that is sure to please. A clock for the boy's room or a calendar may also be considered.

A boy who has got to turnover collars and vests will rejoice in a card plate and cards, with, of course, a neat little case. The same young gentleman will also be glad of a natty umbrella, with his name somewhere on the handle. His less aspiring brother, one or two years younger, will be quite as well pleased with one of the school sort. His name may be stamped on a bit of white linen and fastened to one of the ribs on the inside, close to the stick. This is not for ornament, but solely for purposes of identification.

If a boy is a camper anything to add to this outfit will meet with his approval. A rubber coat, extra high boots or a blanket of the same material, a field or opera glass, folding drinking cup, tourist's notebook—these and more readily suggest themselves.

Money in a purse or a purse without the money pleases a boy. So do a cup and saucer for his special use, a fruit knife or napkin ring; games, either new ones or a good set of the old dominos, checkers, chess or a pack of cards in a case. Boys like any sort of musical instrument, from a harmonicon up. A boy to whom Christmas last year brought one of the cheap but not unmusical music boxes amused himself for hours at a time with its easily learned tunes. An accordion is acceptable—to the boy, not to his neighborhood.

To a young book lover a set of shelves for his treasures is a genuine pleasure. They may be had from $3.50 upward, even the cheapest being well finished with brass rod for a curtain, to which the boy will not object. A desk is another piece of furniture which a boy of any size, from the four-year-old with his miniature one not a foot and a half high to his big brother who wants a "roll top" that locks, will welcome. A chair for his individual use at table is sometimes a doubly happy thought, gratifying its recipient and usefully supplementing the dining room furniture.

The New Waists.

To be worn with the suit to give the effect of a complete costume is the waist that matches in color at least, if not the material. Flesh color and white are always dressy and, with a touch of the color of the suit added to them, give a charming effect and the necessary connecting link.

Chiffon, georgette crape, net or tulle in a shade to match the suit is made up over white lace. Often the lace sleeves are left uncovered with the darker hued material. Marquisette is a material that will be frequently used for this purpose.

The less dressy waist of crepe de chine is made on military lines with high collar, [illegible] long sleeves and many buttons. Military colors are added as a decoration.

Collars are either high or low and flat, seldom a combination of the two, or of the convertible type of which there are many [illegible] [illegible]

PERSECUTION OF GOOD HOTELS IS ALLEGED

Rochester—Members of the Village Hotel Association living in the western part of the state met yesterday at the Powers Hotel for the purpose of discussing legislation which it desires to effect at an early date.

In the opinion of many of the village hotel proprietors, as given yesterday, a number of the towns throughout the state have been going dry because the residents of them have been anxious to stamp out the places which have been improperly conducted.

This, it was pointed out, was working a hardship on the men owing hotel property in the smaller towns. Automobile parties from the cities, which have been good hotel patrons for dinners aond suppers, especially throughout the summer months, either avoid the dry towns entirely or upon arriving, if told that they cannot be served with drinks, will motor on to a neighboring towns that has not gone dry, it was said.

Legislation giving licenses to the hotels that are properly conducted and the owners of which live up to the law will bea sked. A meeting of the association will be held in Albany early in aJnuary.

SHERMAN LAW SUITS WITH SUPREME COURT

Washington — Two far-reaching suits under the Sherman anti-trust law reached the Supreme Court today, one involving the anthracite coal other growing out of labor troubles in the rkansas coal fields.

Theg overnment appealed from the decision of the Federal District Court in Eastern Pennsylvania, which sustained only partially the Attorney-General's contentions in the suit to dissolve a number of alleged illegal combinations of railroads and coal companies in the anthracite coal field in Pennsylvania. It is understood the coal interests may file a cross-appeal in the same case.

Chronic Constipation

This disorder is often due to a torpid liver. All that is needed is a few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets to invigorate the liver. Mrs. Wm. H. Clark, Hannibal, N. I took two bottles of them and they strengthened my digestion, regulated my bowels and toned up my system generally." For sale by all druggists.

SUPERVISORS DESIGNATE COUNTY HIGHWAY ROUTES

Yesterday's session of the Supervisors was a busy one, included among the transactions being that of designating the county highway routes, recommended for improvement in 1916. The results follow:

Fulton-Volney, town of Volney, one-half mile; Sandy Creek-Smartville, towns of Sandy Creek and Boylston, five miles; Parish-Hastings, towns of Parish, two miles; Palermo-Mexico, towns of Palermo and Mexico, five miles; Constantia-Cleveland, town of Constantia, eight miles.

Mr. Nichols voted in the negative, the Redfield-Williamstown route not being lncided in the designations. The petition introduced last night by the residents of the town of Redfield for a change of the route is said to be the cause for leaving the road on the list. The petition provided for the changed route as follows:

"Beginning at Van Vleck's Corners running thence northerly to Hogsback hill thence easterly across to the Maple hill or Westwood road, thence north to the village of Redfield."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

Without the help of SYRACUSE papers had a dandy crowd out last evening and that goes to show that the HOME PAPERS reach just as many people, if not more, than the Syracuse papers.

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce Christmas Tree was a decided success as many people have already told us.

Over500 little children were made happy last evening through the LIBERAL DONATIONS OF FULTON MERCHANTS. Therefore be it resolved by the PEOPLE OF FULTON that from NOW on we will TRADE AT HOME.

* * *

FULTON people will take care of FULTON poor, if necessary. Not the Syracuse people; trade at home and further your interests.

* * *

Without the help of a single HONEST report in two of the SYRACUSE PAPERS the CHRISTMAS TREE STANDS AS A TOKEN OF THE GOOD SPIRIT OF THE FULTON PEOPLE.

Co-operation is the backbone of all things in community work. Let's cultivate it; you saw last evening what it means and what we can do without the help of STRANGERS.

* * *

FULTON MERCHANTS! Advertise at HOME. Use your money to BOOST FULTON, not to help Syracuse along. It is an insult to your CITY that you should advertise outside; and this is an insult to Syracuse, because they can LIVE over there without the assistance of FULTON.

* * *

The Christmas spirit was there last evening and we have proven to you what it means when men and women get together for a common cause. You can move mountains, when you work together and that's the reason why we ask for your co-operation.

A Georgia undertaker has given a banquet for doctors of his town. Now what kind of a "get together" meeting should that be called?

* * *

There are over 500 children in the CITY OF FULTON who have nothing against the Chamber of Commerce.

* * *

As long as a man is entertained, he stays. When he gets bored, he simply goes to some other place where he will not be bored. IF A MOTHER CAN KEEP HER BOY AMUSED, HE REMAINS GOOD. The Chamber of Commerce will entertain all of you, so that you will stay here.

* * *

Backing up one's statement with PROOF or SOUND REASONING is one of the difficulties one must overcome before his arguments will receive MORE THAN PASSING NOTICE. The PROOF was given last evening that the people of the City of FULTON can be reached by FULTON PAPERS. Remember the crowd, you merchants and KNOW that you will REACH as many, if not MORE people through HOME ADVERTISING.

* * *

It is well to look forward, but a lot of people have been run down on railroad rights of way because they did not understand that SAFETY FIRST requires that one occasionally look backward too. He who looks backward without looking forward is a reactionary and is hopeless; he who looks forward without looking backward is a visionary, and dangerous. Those who look both ways, and in the light of the past the present and the future, interpret each, are responsible for all the progress the world has ever made pr ever will make in the promotion of HUMAN WELFARE. You, people of FULTON, let's look forward and backward and the City of FULTON will be one of the most progressive cities on the American continent.

Keep that spirit of last evening going and you will be surprised of the results.

THE SMILE OF "KRIS" WORN BY THE "PEEPUL" WHO SAW LAST NIGHT'S CELEBRATION

RETIRING MAYOR HITS SALOONS

Draws Word Picture of Selfish Greed of Men Who Neglect Dear Ones—Remarks Applauded.

Mayor Fox's address last night, upon the occasion of the Municipal Christmas tree celebration, has provoked a lot of enthusiastic support. The mayor said as follows:

It was over nineteen hundred years ago when multitudes were attracted by the brilliancy of a star which appeared in the east. Soon after its appearance the announcement that the greatest gift ever presented had been given the world—the gift of love, in the birth of Christ, in that stable, in a place called Bethlehem.

This gift has spread light and love all through these nineteen hundred and sixteen years, and tonight the gifts of love in the form of these presents to the poor and unfortunate are manifestations of love of man for his brother.

Accompanying the gift of love comes light, happiness and good cheer, which each and every one of these gifts will spread to the hearts of those who may receive them, but the saddest sight to behold on a Christmas Day is a home in which is assembled about [illegible] gazing at the empty stockings and, wondering where that love has wandered which promised to care, caress and protect her, and then again, gaze in the gilded, furnished saloon and observe the free bowl of punch on the bar, and the one who had promised to love and cherish the object in the other picture, leaning with elbow on the bar, spending freely the money for drinks for his friends, while his wife and, children are starving for the love that was bestowed on the world [illegible] loon are surrounded by costly presents and toys.

I wish it were impossible that such scenes as I have pictured could exist within the limits of our fair city. It is the intention of the merchants, Chamber of Commerce and friends, that no such scene can exist in Fulton at this anniversary of the birth of Christ for through their love, they are about to bestow to every known poor, suffering child in the

President Whitaker's Message of Optimism Enthuses the People

"Little folk and grown-ups, in making this Christmas offering we are here, all as children of the Christmas time, we are here in the spirit of a season, when as children little and big our hearts go out for the happiness of others, when we put aside that selfish old fellow called self and think for the merriment and cheerfulness of our playmates.

"There are for many of you visions of Christmas trees to come, for others of us they are recollections, but here we have a lively realization of the fancies of childhood, of the Christmas tree, the tree that casts no gloomy shadows but whose brilliant lights and star above radiate a glow and warmth of followship and happiness, and beneath whose branches would that we might ever linger.

"This tree with all its joyful setting is now presented as the message of scores of our citizens through the Chamber of Commerce to Fulton and its countryside.

"The Chamber of Commerce promises with such co-operation as has made possible this occasion, to seek to keep alive its traditions, its fancies and its hopefulness, that we may labor in its spirit, men, women and children, country and city alike for the community in which we live, having always before us the message of that Christmas star of old—'Peace on Earth Good Will Toward Men.'"

All Roads and Streets Led Toward Emblem That Guided Wise Men

The four thousand citizens of Greater Fulton who gathered in the radiance of the city's first municipal Christmas tree last night proclaimed it a huge success. Ablaze with its many colored lights, strung with tinsel and bearing in its tip top brances the symbol of the star that guided the Wise Men of old, the great tree typified the spirit of Good Will—a new brotherhood in Fulton.

Long before the time set for the program the big crowd began to gather. Grey Old Dobbins brought family after family in sleigh loads into the city. The streets were filled with children. They came from the four corners of the city. They crossed lots, dodged horses, and ran into people as their little legs flew in the direction of the tree. A delegation presented themselves at the Chamber of Commerce rooms and delighted themselves by boosting one another for a peek-in at the window. When the lights were turned on illuminating the tree, hundreds of people had gathered. When the first number on the program, a selection on the chimes, was completed, the outskirts of the crowd began to close in until the entire square, including the greater portions of Oneida street, and First street to Cayuga was a mass of people.

President of the Chamber of Commerce, N. L. Whitaker gave a short address in which he spoke of the meaning of the tree, the purpose of the Chamber of Commerce and urged all to unite in the movement for a greater Fulton. In closing he introduced Mayor Fox who spoke of the message of the Star nineteen hundred years ago. He delineated upon the need of protecting the sacredness of the home circle today and spoke in strong terms regarding the evils of intemperence in this city. Mayor Fox who will soon vacate his office pointed out that while acting as the city's chief official he had ever been vigilant regarding intemperence and gave in figures the increase in the number of arrests made of intoxicated persons during the latter part of his term in office.

The band in its usual unexcelled manner gave two selections,

"KILKENNY" TREATS OF LAST CENTURY DAYS

The scenes of Fiske O'Hara's new play, "Kilkenny," are laid in that famous Irish city during the early years of the nineteenth century, when that garden spot of the Emerald Isle was the center of social gaiety, and the gentry of the period made the 'Kilkenny Carnival," which occured in October of each year, and continued for two weeks, the season's big event. During this carnival season amateur theatrical performances were given by ladies and gentlemen of the city for charity, and the author has made prominent use of the various features of the "Kilkenny Carnival" in his new play. Mr. O'Hara is said to be at his best in the role of Richard Desmond, the dashing young Irishman, who fights for his sweetheart, triumphs over his enemies, and sings his way into the hearts of all who hear him. Mr. O'Hara has been provided with a quintette of new songs, especially written for his use in "Kilkenny," the titles of which are: "That's What An Irishman Means," "Contrary Mary Clary," "Ireland is Ireland to Me," "Dear Mother Mine," and "When It's Moonlight in Mayo." The popular actor-singer will be one of the early attractions of the season in this city.

THE QUIRK

George Broadhurst, author of "The Price," in which Helen Ware makes her initial appearance in the Equitable program, was responsible for the two biggest dramatic sensations New York has ever known. "The Man of the Hour" and "Bought and Paid For," are both from Broadhurst's pen, and he claims "The Price" to be his masterpiece.

"The Price," as it will be seen at the Quirk Theatre today was picturized in five acts by the Triump Film Corporation for Equitable, and is the third release of that concern, closely following the classic standard of "Trilby" and "The Master of the House," which preceded it.

In addition to Helen Ware, "The Price" contains many names familiar to theatrical-going people, and was produced at great expense and with elaborate scenic effects.

'TWAS A BULLY GOOD SIGHT

"This is the greatest night Fulton has ever seen," a not unusual expression heard last night, as the great outpouring of people vied with each other in their exhibition of patience as they were jostled by their neighbors.

But what did it all mean? It simply meant that the spirit of community building has come to Fulton. It was an indication of the beginning of harmonious relations that shall and must exist in this city before any real good can be accomplished.

Think of it, not less than twenty-five per cent of this city's population massed before the monster tree, with its hundreds of twinkling lights, the bright star, all eager to catch every word uttered. And wasn't it grand? Didn't the sight strike right home. Didn't the spirit of the whole thing get right under the skin, making you feel that it is good to live in the old town?

It is hard to criticize the first attempt at getting together in a brotherly way, other than to express regret that the communiy singing did not come up to expectations; but time works wonders, and who cares to predict the impossibility of organizing here a fine community chorus that will lead the singing at all open-air events. This can be done, and if the word of one who knows amounts to anything, it will be done. But just wait until next year, because there is nothing more contagious in the world of good things than the spirit of good will and brotherly feeling.

And now, right on top of last night's celebration, let us ask, Is there any other business on earth that needs something to encourage the people to take an interest in the Chamber of Commerce more than a liberal application of the spirit visible on every countenance of those who turned out to see the big show? No, not one; for the simple reason that the Chamber has been a target shot at from ever conceivable angle and with every kind of ammunition, and sometimes without just cause.

The Evening Times congratulates the Chamber of Commerce; its president, secretary, board of directors, and the gentlemen who contributed their time, money and general goodfellowship to bring about harmonious relations among the people of this city. Their work is well done, and the citizens of this city who were guests of the Chamber on the plaza, last night, have every reason to feel proud of the men who found time to do so much to weld the broken chain of harmony and cooperation.

THE SANTA CLAUS LEGEND

Rather frequently we hear parents—often the young parents who are bringing up their babies scientifically—debating the wisdom of telling to children the legends regarding Santa Claus. Scientific living is good for babies, but they cannot live by science alone. They need a little imagination thrown in. The normal child lives in a dream world of make-believe that is broadened and deepened by delightful fairy stories and folk-lore tales. A good legend has an ennobling and cultural value, and eventually develops the child into an understanding and human person of broad sympathies and wide interests.

We Americans are fast enough reducing our mental activities to the practical and necessary, without robbing our children of the joys that the anticipation of Santa's visit can bring. Those of us who were told the story in the right way and who have the precious memory of the thrills and sense of mystery we enjoyed in expectation the night before Christmas, know that it was what made child life worth living. In this country we have little enough folk-lore to relate to our children, which may account to considerable extent for our lack of culture as a nation, but at any rate it stands us in hand to hold fast to what has descended to us. The legend of Santa Claus and the custom of hanging stockings to receive Christmas gifts was brought to this country by the Pilgrim Fathers. A custom that passed their puritanical censorship ought not to rouse truth-telling scruples in the minds of our parent-folk today. A mother who has never been found wanting in truth on any other occasion will never be charged by her trusting offspring with untruth in the case of the Santa Claus legend if she has presented it with reasonable tact and common sense.

The original German legend has a good bit of poetry in it and a good deal of sacredness as well. At first it was the Christ Child who was the dominant figure in the Christmas giving and who was believed to reward obedient children who loved their parents. The name, "Krist Kindlein," (little Christ Child) gradually lost the personality of the Christ Child as the giver of physical gifts, however, and was corrupted to Kriss Kringle, a being finally identified with Santa Claus. In a book on this subject, entitled "Is There a Santa Claus? Jacob Riis says: "Santa Claus is the spirit of Christmas, and ever and ever so many years ago when the dear little baby was born after whom we call Christmas, and was cradled in a manger out in the stable because there was not room in the inn, the spirit came into the world to soften the hearts of men and make them love one another. Therefore, that is the mark of the Spirit to this day. Don't let anybody or anything rub it out; the rest doesn't matter."—Utica Observer.

THE FARMER AND CONGRESS

The big issue for the farmer is the reorganization of the distribution of farm products so as to reduce the present enormous cost of getting his products to the consumer and make absolutely sure that he gets his share of the profits.

The three branches of this problem are marketing, transportation and rural credit. Any farmer who allows his thoughts to be distracted from these three great distribution problems has no "kick" coming if either "Big Business" or the zealous advocates of other reforms succeed and the farmer and his interests are pushed aside.

The situation is serious. While the attention of the farmers is being distracted by other issues, the ship-subsidy crowd is again in full cry, determined to win its fight this time and share in the rich plucking of the world's producers that comes from the power to control ocean freight rates.

While farmers are hair-splitting over momentary reforms or the degree of direct government aid in rural credits, the big interests are moving to abolish the office of comptroller of the currency because they have lost control and the present comptroller is using all his power to "give the producers a square deal in bank credits."—Farmers' Open Forum.

IN DANGER

"Too many cooks spoil the broth" appears to be finding new application in regard to the program for preparedness in Congress. It appears quite likely that there is a very large majority in favor of national defense, but the trouble is that too many of those in favor have their own plan for bringing it about. There are said to be more than a dozen plans already before Congress, and each one has its vigorous supporters. Almost every speaker upon this topic the country over, and of course nearly all writers—of which there are a multitude—have ideas as to how the country ought to proceed in its defense. No matter whether a man ever saw a military trench or, not, or can tell how many men comprise a regiment and how many regiments there are in a corps, he has his own ideas about the army that the United States ought to have, and how it should be formed.

We will not go very far if the discord continues, in Congress as well as out. The country as a whole believes that we should proceed in such manner as to be able to defend ourselves in the event of necessity for so doing, but the leaders of parties and factions, each of whom is struggling for some advantage, are quite likely to defeat the object through their unfortunate division as to means.—Utica Press.

LIKE CURES LIKE

The old medical law of similars, similia similibus curantur, has a very limited application, but there are some striking instances constantly turning up which cause it to maintain its place in medicine. Curiously enough, our modern vaccines and serums, the very latest thing in modern scientific medicine, follow this law in certain regards and serve to show how much there may be in it.

Its application has been particularly noted in certain of the mental conditions otherwise difficult of treatment. Those suffering from an exaggerated ego or a delusion of grandeur often are rendered more irritable by contact with normal individuals, while not infrequently they are distinctly relieved of their worst symptoms by being brought intimately in touch with sufferers of the same kind.

The law seems to be working out rather strikingly in the case of the voyagers on the Ford peace ship. Already a number of conversions from exaggerated pacifism, cures of inveterate or chronic self-assertiveness, are reported. Others may be confidently looked for. The remedy of similars is rather heroic but often strikingly effective.—N. Y. Herald.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—If any hungry Democratic Congressman slipped by the doorkeeper at Representative William B. McKinley's "Get Acquainted" party a few days ago, he probably slunk out the rear door with his free trade ears drooped, and then wrote back home to store the plow in the barn out of the weather, and be kind to the old mule because things were sort of slipping in Washington and he would be back home in 1916 to return to breaking the glebe for a considerable spell.

Nothing like that love feast has been witnessed in the New Willard Hotel since Landlord Hight's grandpa wore coppertoed boots. It wasn't one of those sit-down-to table affairs with your next-seat neighbor to talk to and a nimble-footed waiter bothering your elbow, but a buffet luncheon. Tables were ranged along two walls of the big red room, where you could get anything from oysters creamed in a chafing-dish to "hot dogs." Good food and no frills. Just step right up and help yourself. Eat it standing and gossip between bites.

The only formality was being introduced to the new Members of Congress, "the freshman class," as Congressman Mann calls them. As you stepped into the room you saw before you a long U-shaped line of capable looking men, each wearing a badge showing the State from which he hailed. You walked along the line and were introduced to each Member, and then the glad hand. When you arrived at the end of the line the names were shaken up in your memory like the pills in a Kelly pool bottle, but that didn't matter because "by their fruits ye shall know them." After everybody had shaken hands with everybody else the line broke up and there was a general levee of "hold-overs," "come-backers," and "newcomers," to accept Host McKinley's terminology.

The hum of voices and gusts of laughter continued for half an hour, when Representative Martin Madden, of Illinois, was chosen toastmaster and some of the guests were called upon for impromptu remarks. Senators Weeks, Harding and Sherman ladled out some political hot-shot, and then George O'Connor, Washington's silver-throated tenor, sang some coon songs. When he had finished, Floor Leader Mann addressed the new Members, giving some sage advice, but remaining strangely non-commital as to what committeement assignments he intended for them. The inimitable J. Adam Bede, former RRepresentative from Minnesota, followed. Mr. Bede admitted following the chautauqua circuit, or "Bryan Boulevard," as he calls it; and he punctuated some good Republican logic with a number of side-splitting anecdotes. Senator William Alden Smith was requested to speak, but he had been called out. Finally they passed the buck tot "Uncle" Joe Cannon, who, possessed of the vigor of youth and the experience of forty years of political forensics, proceeded to lambaste the Democratic party until nothing was left but the rim, and that wasb roken. The addresses closed with a few words of welcome from "our genial host," Hon. William B. McKinley, who is a "come-backer," and, let it be added, a "stay-hither."

Underlying all thel aughter, loquacity, and eloquence of the evening was the stern resolve to dislodge the Democracy in 1916, and the firm conviction that it will be done. That feeling peryaded the gathering. It permeated the atmosphere. You could sense it as you entered the room. And, why not? The Republican party presents a united front today. Thef amily quarrel is dropped that the enemy, which sneaked into the house while the family was having it out in thhe back yard, may be kicked into the street. When Mr. McKinley first proposed the party, somebody suggested it be called a "Get Together" party. "Get together, nothing," replied McKinley. "We already are together. We'll call it a "Get Acquainted" party, and the invitations so announced it, and "an enjoyable time was had by all."

MAY WHEAT REACHES NEW HIGH ON CROP

Chicago—May wheat sold at $1.25 today, a new high level on the crop, There were a few in the trade who have said that the May future would reach $1.25 during its life, but they hardly expected it to advance to that figure today.

The situation during the entire session and after the close of the day's business was more bullish than when prices were 10c to 15c lower.

It is now conceded that the Dardanelles will not be opened to commercial shipping until after the close of the conflict abroad, and that the Russian wheat now held back in the Czar's country, will remain there.

Another help to thew heat market today was a report from New York that thep ossibilities of raising the embargo on grain at the East is more favorable, and that the outward movement of all products will be freer in a short time.

The buying of futures by foreign countries was again in evidence, and the taking of 3,000,000 bushels of cash wheat in all positions in North America helped values.

Ass long as the cash demand continues, as is now to be seen, there will be no let down in the May price worthy of mention.

When thel arge movement of wheat to primary and other markets is considered it will be seen that the demand for the cash article was never so large as at present. Western receipts today were 2,335,000 bushels, which exceeds the corresponding day a year ago by 1,000,000 bushels.

RURAL POLICE LEGISLATION

Headquarters of the committee for a state police, whichh arel ocated in New York, announce that legislation providing for the patrol of rural and suburban sections of New York state will be introduced at Albany next month.

W. N. Giles of Skaneateles, secretary of the New York State Grange, is a member of the executive committee of the committee for a state police. The bill which is now being drawn calls for a force of mounted men just large enough to patrol the open country and recommends an organization similar to Pennsylvania's state constabulary. As was the case when the subject was brought up on previous occasions, the claim is being made that the savings which the police would accomplish along the lines of apprehension of law breakers, road inspection and fire prevention, would more than offset the expenditures which the state might undergo to maintain the troopers.—Batavia News

—the Family Gift

How often you have thought "Oh, if we only had a picture of the baby just as she looks now."—or the sturdy four-year old boy with his first sled. Then there are the family parties, and the young folks' jollifications, all the year round, that a snap-shot would bring to mind months and years afterwards. What is more precious than a smile?—and how often you will laugh over some funny incident preserved by the Kodak.

Don't let this Christmas pass by without the gift of a Kodak to some member of your family, as inexpensive or as costly as you please, but always invaluable.

RETIRING MAYOR HITS SALOONS

city, love in the form of some useful present, which will bring happiness, joy and radiating smiles on these otherwise saddened faces.

There has been in the City of Fulton during the past two years 233 more arrests for public intoxication than were made in the two preceding years. I have been told that I was, through my persistency in removing drunkenness from the streets and in preventing violations of the Raines Law, ruining the city that it was necessary to have wide open, or in other words, a liberal interpretation of this law to have a prosperous city. Is it necessary to have 562 arrests in a city the size of Fulton, that a few saloon keepers might prosper? I have been told just recently that all but three or four saloons in the City of Fulton are complaining of lack of business. I do not think it necessary to deprive love from 562 families, that a few Saloon keepers may temporarily scatter a little light and sunshine in their homes.

May the spirit of love which prompted the erection of this tree and the giving of these gifts, be extended beyond this Christmas day, and into and through the following year, 1916, aye and forever.

and accompanied the crowd which sang "Joy to the World." While the people as a unit did not join in the song was due no doubt to the newness of singing in the open, the absence of a general to marshal enthusiasm—as Harry Barnhard, community chorus leader, did at the Chautauqua tent last summer—and, too, a lack of familiarity with the words of the song.

The Schumann Club occupied the platform with the band and was heard to excellent advantage.

Mr. F. E. Goodjon is deserving of especial credit in taking charge of the music. To be in charge of so large an andience which had not been trained in chorus work would be no easy feat for even a specialist. As a beginning the effort was indeed invigorating.

Secretary Hollenga introduced by President N. L. Whitaker gave a little talk that plainly "caught the crowd," Upon being introduced he received a hearty welcome voiced in applause, and a whole ovation from young Fulton grouped about the platform. Secretary Hollenga, it was plainly seen, is "solid" with the youngsters. They cheered and whistled and whoop-eed until a halt was called. Where some of the energy or "horse power" of Fulton's population lays is now an open secret. The children know!

"Brighten the Corner," which seemed appropriate was sung by all, also "O Come All Ye Faithful," and "America." Santa Claus made his appearance on the platform just before Secretary Hollenga announced the children would follow the band as leader to the Chamber rooms, where the gifts would be distributed.

Amid hoots and with flying heels the brigade fell into line. Blue coats stationed at the Chamber rooms were nearly swamped in an effort to keep a semblance of order. Later troops of bundle-laden tots wended their way homeward, carrying too with them an idea that the Chamber of Commerce is a happiness maker, its symbol a star, and Good Will its motto.

The public's appreciation of our generous offer of Holiday Goods was demonstrated by the great numbers of people who thronged our store daily.

TELEPHONE CARRIES SPEECH 3900 MILES

New York—Two hundred men, members of the Quill Club and their friends, sat in the Hotel Manhatten last night and heard David Starr Jordan, president of Leland, Jr., University, deliver a speech 3,900 miles away in Palo Alto, Cal. The miracle was accomplished by the transcontinental telephone. Each man had a receiver. Every word of Dr. Jordan's ten-minute speech on 'Peace" could be heard distinctly.

The Quill Club made a rapid journey across the continent, via the telephone wire. It went from Pittsburgh, to Chicago to Omaha, to Denver to Salt Lake City to San Francisco in less than a minute. An operator in each of the cities sent his greetings to the club.

Dr. Charles L. Goodell, D. D., president of the club, chatted with one of its members, Robert Watnhorn, in Los Angeles, who greeted his fellow members. "It's mighty warm out here now. It is half past six and the moon has just come out." At that time it was half past nine at the Hotel Manhattan by Eastern time.

The secretary of the club, Dr. C. P. Fagoni, then called up his friend, Professor Willis Baer, president of Occidental College, Los Angeles, and they talked for several minutes, every word of their conversation being easily audible to those listening at the individual receivers.

For music the club did not have a New York Orchestra. Alma Gluck and Caruso (on phonograph records) sent their voices across the plains and the cities via the wires, and they were heard distinctly in several selections. While motion pictures of the Golden Gate and the Pacific Ocean were being shown, the members of the club heard the roaring of the ocean itself over the wire.

"A Herald of Progress?"

A Doctor's Story

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

One of my patients was a Miss Young, an orphan, whose uncle had called on me to visit her.

I attended Miss Young for some time, during which I not only made no headway in improving her condition, but lost ground. I noticed that whenever I called the nurse was in the sickroom and never left it during my visit. One day while I was with the patient, having asked the nurse to get me something from the bathroom adjoining and she was absent a few seconds. Miss Young's face suddenly assumed a pained expression, and she whispered in my ear, "She's killing me." She had barely time to say this and resume her usual expression when the nurse returned.

Of course I gave no sign to Miss Hazard, the nurse, of what had been communicated to me, but I saw at once that something must be done to free my patient from her ministration. I called up Mr. Van Orden, the uncle, and told him over the phone that I was not satisfied with his niece's nurse and would not be responsible for my patient unless she were replaced by another of my own choosing. I received no definite reply, but before my next visit was informed that since the patient had lost ground under my treatment he had decided to call in another physician. My services would no longer be required.

Putting together what my patient had told me and my dismissal at attempting to get rid of the nurse, I made up my mind at once that something was wrong. But I dared not act without more information and resolved to preceed cautiously. I soon came to the conclusion that I had better act with my successor in the case and sent my office assistant to watch the house and discover who had succeeded me. She reported that a recent graduate, a Dr. Vernon, had called at the house, and I at once made an appointment to meet him and put him in possession of all that I knew about the strange condition of affairs.

Vernon, possessing this knowledge, had a great advantage, since it was not known that he had it, and he could thus the better take steps to make more discoveries. We arranged that I should make inquiries as to who the parties were and secure such other information as was possible. Vernon was to do what he could by way of investigation in the sickroom. I learned that Miss Young was an heiress and that her uncle was her guardian till she came to be twenty-one years old, when the estate would pass into her own keeping.

Vernon found means to communicate with the patient by insisting that the nurse get something for him that would require her going to the kitchen, and he learned that the medicine he was giving had a taste that it should not have. He gave Miss Young a vial, which she concealed under the bedclothes, and when about to take a dose she sent the nurse to the bathroom for a glass of water. While she was gone the patient emptied the medicine into the vial, and when the doctor called again he took it away with him.

That evening Vernon and I in my laboratory investigated the contents of the vial and found traces of a slow poison. The secret was out—the guardian was killing his ward. Investigations made by Vernon, who was by this time much interested in the case, as well as his patient, revealed the fact that with Miss Young out of the way Van Orden would be sole heir-at-law to her estate.

The question now arose, What should be our next step? Should we inform the victim of this conspiracy of her danger or have the suspected parties arrested without her knowledge? Vernon told me that his patient was in a nervous condition, bordering on collapse, and recommended that we act without consulting her. To this I assented.

That same morning Van Orden was arrested, and Miss Hazard was called out of the sickroom and also taken into custody. A new nurse whom I had selected was ready to take her place and at once entered upon her duties. Vernon and I were in the house at the time of the arrests and entered the sickroom with the new nurse. The patient saw at once that she had been delivered from the tyranny under which she had been slowly dying and greeted us with a smile of supreme relief. Had I not been a married man I should have been disgruntled at seeing the look she gave Vernon, for it was plain that she had given him her heart.

"Oh, doctor," she said to him when she knew all that we thought best to tell her, "how much I owe you!"

"Where do I come in?" I asked.

"And you, too, of course."

Our patient was not told that an attempt had been made to poison her and that her uncle and nurse had been arrested charged with the crime until she had recovered her health. Her recovery was hastened by the especial attentions, or, rather, the devotion of Dr. Vernon, and before she was informed as to what had occurred they were engaged.

Van Orden jumped his bail and disappeared. Miss Hazard's counsel succeeded in having her acquitted because the prosecution failed to prove that she had any motive for the crime. Nevertheless it was known that her motive was a large share of the fortune her employer was trying to secure, or at least a promise of it.

PEARL WHITE

SHELDON LEWIS AND PEARL WHITE

SHE OF THE BLONDE TRESSES COMES BACK TO PICTURES IN A WELL-KNOWN DRAMA, PLAYING OPPOSITE SHELDON LEWIS OF THE "ELAINE" SERIES FAME

Pearl White, she of the blonde tresses and irrepressible good spirits, has returned to picture work after a long vacation, her first in years. This should bring comfort to the many anxious fans who have wondered why of late they have not been seeing her on the screen undergoing the numerous perils and exploits that have been her lot. She has signed a contract for another year with Pathe, and is starring in a five-reel picture called "The King's Game," adapted from George B. Seitz's well-known play of the same title. It is interesting to note that in this picture she plays opposite Sheldon Lewis, her co-worker in "The Exploits of Elaine," and that Arnold Daly, the hero of that serial, is producing the picture.

Miss White today is undoubtedly one of the three best known motion picture stars in the business, and commands a high salary. This is the result of her work in the various very popular serials beginning with "The Perils of Pauline," now a film classic, and extending through the three "Elaine" serials. It is promised that she will star in another Pathe serial before long, as well as in various feature photoplays.

LEGACY HIDDEN 61 YEARS.

$73 Deposit Had Grown to $1,620 When Widow Discovered Book.

After lying idle sixty-one years, during which it increased by interest from $73 to $1,620, an account in the Provident Savings institution of Jersey City is claimed by Mrs. Caroline Weldon of that city as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Thomas, who died in 1879.

While examining old papers Mrs. Weldon came across a bank book which showed that in 1854 her husband had deposited $73 in the institution. The amount had not been disturbed afterward.

Mrs. Weldon had been appointed administratrix of her husband's estate, so through her attorney she obtained from Surrogate Stickel at Newark, where the family resided years ago, a certified copy of her letters of administration. With these she will be able to claim the bank account.

A Very Old Rule.

The oldest mathematic book in the world is believed to be the "Papyrus Rhind" in the British museum, professed to have been written by Ahmes, a scribe of King Ra-a-us, about the period between 2000 and 1700 B. C. This "Papyrus Rhind" was translated by Eisenlohr of Leipsig, and it was found to contain a rule for making a square equal in area to a given circle. It was not put forth as an original discovery, but as the transcript of a treatise 500 years older still, which sends us back to approximately 2500 B. C., when Egyptian mathematicians solved, or thought they had solved, the problem of squaring the circle.

Woman's World

A Feminine Expert in Railroad Rates.

MRS. GEORGE ALEXANDER MOSSHART.

Railroad rates, it might be readily assumed, are not in the sphere of woman's comprehension, but there is at least one suffragist who has proved her capacity to master that dry and technical subject.

She is Mrs. George Alexander Mosshart, president of the Washington Woman Suffrage council and treasurer of the committee of influential Washington women, who are in charge of the arrangements which are being made for the forty-seventh annual convention of the National American Woman Suffrage association, to be held in Washington, Dec. 14 to 19, inclusive.

In her unmarried days Mrs. Mosshart was secretary of the Nebraska state railway commission and one of the foremost women rate experts in America. Over initials which did not betray her sex she is said to have contributed many an article to the railway journals of the country on the field which she has made her own. Naturally enough, she believes that there are no phases of government which women cannot study and master.

Since her marriage to a well known Washington correspondent, however, Mrs. Mosshart has given up her profession and contented herself with suffrage work. She is an ardent admirer of Dr. Shaw and a strong advocate of the broad nonpartisan policy of the National American Woman Suffrage association.

Suffrage in Nippon.

There should be a voting population in Japan, if suffrage were universal, of at least 10,000,000. Instead, suffrage is not universal; it is largely restricted. In round numbers about 1,500,000 of the Japanese have the franchise, and of these at a general election like the one held in March of this year about 80 per cent vote. Before a Japanese can vote he must be at least twenty-five years old and pay 10 yen a year, or $5, of direct taxation. There are other restrictions also, but these are the general terms.—Saturday Evening Post.

Christmas Dreams.

Were every Christmas of which we have been present at the celebration painted accordingly to nature, what a gallery of pictures! True that a sameness would pervade them all, but only that kind of sameness that pervades the nocturnal heavens. One clear night always is to common eyes just like another, for what hath any night to show but one moon and same stars—a blue vault, with here a few braided and there a few castellated clouds? Yet no two nights ever bore more than one family resemblance to each other before the studious and instructed eye of him who has long communed with nature and is familiar with every smile and frown on her changeful, but not capricious, countenance. Even so with the annual festivals of the heart.

"Thoughts that like spirits trackless come—and go" is a fine line of Charles Lloyd's. But no bird skims, no arrow pierces the air without producing some change in the universe. No coming or going is absolutely trackless, nor irrecoverable by nature's law is any consciousness, however ghostlike, though many a one, even the most blissful, never does return, but seems to be buried among the dead. But they are not dead, but only sleep, though to us who recall them not they are as they had never been, and we, wretched ingrates, let them lie forever in oblivion. How passing sweet when of our own accord they rise to greet us in our solitude!—Christopher North.

ONCE BANKER, FULLER IS NOW DAY LABORER

When Bank Failed He Was Glad to Get Strenuous Job.

Winslow, Ill.—From a well dressed banker to a day laborer in overalls is the transition of J. Bradley Fuller, who, with his sisters owned and operated the private bank of Fuller & Son at Winslow. Necessity forced the former banker to obtain means of support.

The only occupation available was that of helping manufacture concrete blocks. He is paid $2 a day for ten hours and is docked for every hour in which he is not occupied.

Upon the recent return of Fuller from the east, his departure taking place just one week prior to the failure of the bank, he was on the verge of nervous prostration. The sympathy of his friends assisted in restoring his nerves to their normal condition, and he announced his willingness to take any kind of work which afforded himself and his family a living.

After seeking in vain for some occupation more remunerative and with less physical labor involved, he went to work with the concrete firm and expects to remain there until something more inviting develops. His family take their reduced circumstances philosophically, all seeking employment in order to contribute to the common fund.

The report of the auditing board, of which D. F. Graham, president of the First National bank of Freeport is chairman, shows that the liabilities of the Winslow bank are $168,947, while the assets are $120,985. On this basis depositors will receive about 70 cents on the dollar. The auditor assumed that the assets credited to a furniture manufacturing company of Manitowoc, Wis., amounting to $20,000, would not depreciate.

WIFE SAVED HIM.

Rode 300 Miles With Baby on Pony to Plead For Her Husband.

Salem, Ore.—The hardships of a 300 mile horseback trip made by Mrs. Walter Quick and baby of Lakeview over mountainous trails to plead for the release of her husband from the state prison were not without avail, the state parole board deciding to recommend to the government that Quick be paroled.

Quick will be confronted with the problem of reaching his home when Governor Withycombe orders his release. He has a homestead near Lakeview, 300 miles from Salem, and his only means of transportation is the pony on which his wife and baby made the long trip here.

Quick was sent to prison for the theft of a sack of oats and a box of shotgun shells.

Gown of Scarlet Velvet and Chinchilla Worn by Mrs. Vernon Castle

Designed by Hickson, New York.

A GOWN designed by Hickson for Mrs. Vernon Castle is what Hickson calls the scarlet tanager, as the wrap is of scarlet velvet, with a novel stole and cape, to say nothing of a flounce of chinchilla. There are big, wide cuffs which could replace a muff, and the enormous fur collar can be worn at any height, as both sides are of fur. The modest price of this bit of gorgeousness is $1,600.

● ● ●

Black furs for the moment seem to be a discarded vogue. Gray furs of every shade imaginable are the high style factors of fur vogues for this season. Gray fox and krimmer, astrakhan and dyed furs are most important, with squirrel and chinchilla stripes introduced as novelties of high and low degree. As for muffs, they are of all sorts, both grave and gay.

● ● ●

Narrow pleatings of taffeta are still much used for trimming both on silk and serge.

● ● ●

Kid ornaments for trimming tailored hats are in good style.

● ● ●

A new black velvet toque is made with a long tam-o'-shanter crown, the end of which is wound about the throat. There is a fur tassel on the end and a fur band around the toque.

● ● ●

With the returned vogue for high collars, many of the detachable sort are sold in the shops. Some are made with extensions over the front of the bodice something in the manner of jabots. One of these shows a wide band of lace insertion for the base of the collar, with shirred georgette crape for the top and a frill of lace and crape at the front.

● ● ●

For sports the smartest things in stockings are those of very heavy silk, striped in two or sometimes three colors—purple, green and black, for instance, or blue, purple and green.

● ● ●

Brocade is used for boudoir slippers. The main color of the brocade should of course match the boudoir gown, and sometimes the brocaded silk slippers match the upholstery of the boudoir itself.

● ● ●

Suede and leather are used for sports clothes of various sorts. A suede jacket is especially suitable for skating, as it is light, yet quite impervious to cold. It is thin and snug and can therefore be worn under a coat or jacket without adding bulkiness. Suede and leather must, of course, be made in strictly tailored fashion, depending on straps and stitching and pockets for trimming.

A Style Tip on Skirts.

Stylists certainly are giving the separate skirt all the prominence it deserves this season. Most of the latest models show pleats, but there is something individual about their arrangement in every new skirt. The accompanying model is a four-piece skirt with a pleated section between the gores and patch pockets.

Using 54-inch material, 2½ yards are required to make the skirt in medium size.

The material is first folded in half before cutting. Only one section in the skirt is laid on the fold, and that is the belt, which is placed into position last. The first section of the pattern to be laid on the material, however, is the back gore. Then where it slopes away at the side, the pocket is laid into place, on a lengthwise thread of the material. The pleated section is arranged next to the back gore, to the right, and its straight edge rests against the selvage of the cloth. Opposite the pleated section is placed the front gore, very near to the edge, yet on a lengthwise thread of the goods.

The measurements given are for material without nap; if the goods has nap, then 2¾ yards of cloth will be required to make the skirt.

If the design is to be used until late in the season it is well to omit trimmings of contrasting material. The effectiveness of the belt and pockets may be increased, however, by stitching along the edges with fine soutache braid.

Patch pockets and a smart belt are prominent features of this new skirt, which is cut in four gores and trimmed with inserted side sections.

A Continual Christmas

Let no pleasure tempt thee, no profit allure thee, no ambition corrupt thee, no example sway thee, no persuasion move thee to do anything thou knowest to be evil; so shalt thou always live jollily, for a good conscience is a continual Christmas.—Benjamin Franklin.

Fasting at Christmas

When Cromwell ruled England he issued an edict against all festivities at Christmas. The festival was altogether abolished and the display of holly and mistletoe and other emblems of the happy time held to be seditious.

The Yule Log

The observance of lighting the Yule log from the remnants of the previous Christmas log can probably be traced to the ancient belief in the efficacy of fire, which was supposed never to be extinguished. It is a link in the chain that binds us to bygone times when, to quote Max Muller, "the hearth was the first altar, the father the first priest, his wife and children and slaves the first congregation."

In the Wake of Christmas

An aftermath of Christmas which people would fain ignore is the necessity of writing notes of thanks to all who have sent gifts. Just why it should be such a task to spare a few minutes in fulfilling an act of courtesy in return for a favor it is difficult to say, but probably it is the number of such notes to be written which terrifies the would-be polite.

To children the joys of Christmas are absolutely dulled by the prospect of dutiful letters to be indited to out of town relatives and friends, and one small girl used to devote the entire day on New Year's to this gigantic task, for she invariably enumerated the entire list of the presents she had received in every letter she wrote. Her epistles used to read somewhat as follows:

Dear Aunt Jane—I thank you very much for the beautiful gift you so kindly sent me. I received, also eight books, three school companions, a muff, a breastpin, a box of candy, a gold pencil, two pictures and a paint box. Thanking you again for the doll, I am your loving niece.

With slight variations this note was sent to many people every year before the writer grew old enough to know that other people were not so interested in her affairs as she was herself and as her years increased her discretion grew until, for her own sake, she began to shorten her notes of thanks down to—

Dear Aunt Jane—Your lovely gift received. Accept my thanks. With much love, from your affectionate niece.

It is to be feared that nowadays people are as remiss about acknowledging gifts as they are in answering invitations, about which there is more than a crying need for reform. It is still worse to delay writing a few words in return for a gift which has cost the sender some trouble and thought. Such should be answered verbally or by a letter at the earliest opportunity.

"But, oh, it is hard to write when one has to give thanks for some crazy thing one does not want!" cries the modern miss. "I don't mind thanking people for what I did like, but I can't be hypocritical." And forthwith she sits down at the telephone with a list in her hand and calls up in turn all those of her friends and relatives who have telephones and who have sent her presents.

This is a labor saving device which saves some note paper and stamps, but which does not really save much time. The telephone may have put letter writing out of fashion, but it never was intended to dispense with polite usages in society.

So, unlike the little girl previously quoted, do not postpone your notes of thanks for a New Year's task. Begin the new year with a clean slate as far as debts of courtesy are concerned, as well as in other matters.

Why Tagore Avoids Japan.

A traveler returned from India to Japan, according to the East and West News, tells why Sir Rabindranath Tagore, India's great poet, gave up his proposed visit to the Land of the Rising Sun—first, he says, because the Hindu poet, like other poets, changes his mind frequently; second, because his tenants are suffering from want of food; third, he has become incensed at a Japanese who [illegible] Tagore's confidence, pretending to be an admirer of the poet's most refined works [illegible] the while insanely addicted to London [illegible] songs. For the Children

F. C. Bradman, Jr., Youngest United States Marine.

Although his parents didn't raise him to be a soldier, Frederic C. Bradman, Jr., of Mare Island, Cal., aged seven years, has twice formally enlisted in the United States marine corps and is a corporal in his second "hitch," to use the sea soldier vernacular.

Corporal Bradman wears a service stripe and a good conduct medal as a reward for excellent service during his first enlistment and also sports a sharpshooter's badge that was won by proxy. The youngest marine has had two years' foreign service in Cuba, which will count as four years toward the thirty years necessary for retirement. And Corporal Bradman says he will re-enlist until he shall have served thirty years.

Major Frederic L. Bradman, U. S. M. C., father of the boy, is proud of the fact that the regularly enlisted marines have accepted his son as a comrade and obey his orders as corporal.

"French Roll."

A good many children can play in this game. One player is called the buyer. The rest form a line in front of him and take hold of each other. The first in the line is called the baker, the last the French roll. Those between are supposed to be the oven.

When they are in place the buyer says to the baker, "Give me my French roll." The baker replies, "It is at the back of the oven." The buyer goes to fetch it, when the French roll begins running from the back of the oven and comes up to the baker, calling all the while, "Who runs? Who runs?"

The buyer must run after him, but if the French roll gets first to the top of the line he becomes baker, and the last in the line is French roll. If, however, the buyer catches the French roll the French roll becomes buyer, and the buyer takes the place of the baker.

An Alphabet Game.

The best place to play this game is at the table. Somebody begins by saying, "I had for dinner an apple;" the next person says, "I had for dinner an apple and a beet;" the third declares he "had for dinner an apple, a beet and some celery." Each player contributes the name of something to eat beginning with the next letter of the alphabet in order, and he must repeat everything that has been mentioned up to that point in the game. By the time the company has reached "z" there are, of course, twenty-six names to remember, and it is quite likely that most of the players will have missed and have fallen out of the game.

4. What takes place when the new year comes—Ben gill grin.
5. The name of our century—Cute wiry tenth ten.

Answer.—1, New Year's day; 2, midnight; 3, Father Time; 4, bell ringing; 5, twentieth century.

New Year's Long Ago.

Way back in the days of the Romans the New Year celebration was a gala one. They decorated their houses and temples with wreaths of evergreen and presented each other with branches of trees as omens of good luck for the coming year. Also they feasted and made merry in the dance and in the masquerades, visited each other and exchanged gifts much as we now do on Christmas day.

BULGARS FLEE FROM VARNA

London—Martin H. Donohue telegraphs from Athens to the Daily Chronicle:

"The Russian Bulgarian expedition landed yesterday at Varna after the town had been laid in ruins and the Bulgarian artillery silenced. The losses of the garrison were very heavy.

"The Russian transports disembarked their infantry and artillery without loss. The Russians are in sufficient force to hold the town against any Turco-Bulgarian counter attack.

"The Russian expedition which captured Varna was composed of a Ruscsian cruiser and two destroyers conveying sixteen transports filled with troops."

The Bulgarian port of Verna is on the Black Sea, a few miles south of the Roumanian border. It is a railroad terminus. This city and Burgas, fifty miles further south, are the principal Bulgarian Black Sea ports. On several occasions since the beginning of the Teutonic drive through Serbia it has been reported that the Russians would attempt an invasion of Bulgaria from the sea, and it has been said forces were being concentrated for this purpose at Odessa. Previous despatches reporting Russian naval demonstrations before Varna or Burgar, presumably preparatory to an effort to land troops, were not borne out subsequently.

BRITAIN WANTS DOLLAR LOANS

London—The London Gazette publishes today a government invitation to holders of American and Canada dollar securities to place them at the disposal of the Treasury either by sale or loan. The accompanying memorandum says that no purely sterling securities will be accepted, and that it is essential that all securities tendered be expressed in United States or Canadian currency, or, if expressed in sterling, that they shall be convertible at the holder's option into dollar securities.

No bonds will be accepted on which dividend or interest has not been regularly paid since the date of issue, and no stock will be accepted unless a dividend of three per cent or more ha been regularly paid on it since January 1, 1913.

VON HINDENBURG BEATEN AT RIGA

London—H. Patrick Devittee telegraphs to the Daily Express from Geneva:

"The German offensive on the Riga Dvinsk front has completely failed. Field Marshal von Hindenburg has been forced to retire before Russian counter attacks after burying his cannon and abandoning an enormous amount of material.

"The Germans, unable to cross the Dvina, have suffered very heavily. Five German divisions have retreated on Tukum, against which the Russians are advancing. A sanguinary battle is in progress near Uxkull."

It is announced from Teheran, according to a despatch received here from the Petrograd semi-official news agency, that the Russians have occupied the town of Kum, eighty miles scuthwest of Teheran, after a battle in which the opposing forces were completely defeated.

TUPPER LAKE'S NEW INDUSTRY

Boom May Not be of Long Duration---600 Men Employed by Woodenware Company.

Tupper Lake is congratulating itself on account of a boom. The Oval Wood Dish Company is going to move from Traverse City, Mich., to Tupper Lake, and what Tupper Lake apparently fails to perceive is that some day the Oval Wood Dish company will probably have to move again, and when it goes the village will be like many boom towns before they werem ilked dry of their chief asset.

It is reported that the company has purchased 15,000 acres of timber land, consisting principally of hard wood, the soft timbeh having already been cleared off. What 600 men can do to 15,000 acres of hard wood the people of Tupper Lake ought to know well. What will Tupper Lake be and do when the 600 men have finished their job.

But the advance of hard wood manufactories on the Adirondack forests is less a question to Tupper Lake than it is to the people of the State of New-York. The soft woods have been pretty well taken in the Adirondacks. Constant pressure is beinging exerted to secure the remainder on State lands. At the same time the hard wood timber, which constitutes most of the trees in the woods, is being cut in, increasing measure. When that is gone, there will be no forest left at all—only brier patches and weed trees.

For the best purposes of an Adirondack forest there is nothing which can compare with the spruce, hemlock and balsam trees. They make the greatest storage reservoirs, they keep the forest coolest and have the best effect on climate. In the spring before the leaves of the hard woods have started, the evergreen trees shade and protect the thick snow under them, mile it melts rapidly in the open air on the bard wood slopes. Nevertheless, theb eech, birch and maple are much better than no trees at all. When their leaves are out they shade the ground underneath and keep it damp for a long time, and they form a better fire protection than any that man can devise. Wtih the forest gone the damage that the fire would do would be to burn the woods earth, thus retarding any future forest growth.

Among the greatest assets which the people of the State own are the trees wherever they grow, whether on public or on private land. If half what the students of too subject say abount the necessity of forests to man is true, then the people through their governments should require scientific forestry on private lands and make sure that no tree should be cut without another tree being planted.

As the situation stands, the forests are being used far more rapidly than they are growing, and the pace is rapid in New York. Up to a few years ago only the soft timber was being stripped. It means destruction and waste profiting temporarily only a few, and leaving a trail of desolation spread far beyond the region where the forest grows.

STATE'S APPLE CROP IN STORAGE EQUALS 1914

New York had almost exactly the same quantity of apples in cold storage at the beginning of the cold storage season December 1, 1915, as were reported on the same date 1914.

The office of markets of the federal department of agriculture states, however, that there were 15½ per cent more apples in storage in the whole country on December 1 than on the same date one year ago.

New York reports 1,327,231 barrels and 349,313 boxes. At the rate of 3 boxes to a barrel this is a total of 1,410,335 barrels. No other state has half as many, the nearest being Illinois, Missouri and California. All of the far western states report apples only in boxes.

ENEMY COULD CAPTURE SANDY HOOK—J. M. BECK

Philadelphia—James M. Beck, of New York, tonight made a powerful plea for preparedness at the mass meeting of the National Security League in the Academy of Music. The speaker was cheered by thousands who packed the Academy. Mr. Beck said:

"The general staff of our army formulated a report in 1912. It showed it was possible for at least three of the great nations of the world, within ten or thirty days, to put an army ranging from 100,000 to 200,000 men upon the shores of our country.

"To oppose such an invitation, our mobile army, which would almost alone oppose an invasion, does not exceel 35,000 men.

"An army landing as we landed in Cuba from transports at any point on the New Jersey coast, could very readily take Sandy Hok from the rear unless it was guarded by an effective land force. iWth that gone our other defenses of New York would spgedily crumble by a similar attack from the rear, and soon the most opulent city of the country could conceivably be in the hands of the invaders.

"In this appalling condition three alternatives present themselves.

"The first is to make no preparation at all the second is to make an inadequate preparation the third is to make adequate preparation.

"If, within our inadequate defense today, we should be suddenly plunged into war—and all modern wars come with marvelous suddenness — then, for us to confront any one or two of the greatest military powers with an inferior army, or an inadequate army, would clearly be in these times, when war is a matter of chemistry, mechanics and organization, wanton murder."

Local Lodge, B.P.O.E. Pack 72 Big Baskets, Gladdening 72 Homes

This morning at 6 o'clock began the distribution of the Elks' Christmas baskets. Seventy-two baskets of huge dimensions and holding everything possible from eatables to clothing was packed therein. Dozens of chickens, heaps of loaves of bread, candy, fruit, pancake flour and syrup, stockings, shoes, canned goods, salt, sugar, and in fact everything one's imagination could gather.

The sum necessary to meet the expense of the undertaking was made up by each member of the local lodge, B. O. P. E., contributing one dollar. There are three hundred and sixty-two members of [illegible] began early last evening and continued until 2 o'clock this morning. At 6 o'clock the delivery of the baskets was begun.

Theg iving of baskets to the poor at Christmas-time is an old-time custom of the order of Elks. Hundreds through-out the country are each year made glad at Christmas in receiving the gift-baskets.

German Threat Against Egypt Regarded Bluff

London—Reports that Germany is concentrating great armies to attack and conquer Egypt and smash the Allies on all the other fronts are regarded here as sheer bluff. I am in a position to say, if the censor will permit it, that the Turco-German combination will receive the greatest surprise of the war if the Egyptian campaign is pursued. Moreover, I am able to tell you on unimpeachable authority that the descent on Varna is only a small part of the great campaign which Russia is almost ready to resume against the Austro-Germans. My informant declares Russia's wastage now has been replaced by three men for every one lost in the desperate battles against the Austro-German advance in Poland. The artillery of the new Russian forces is of the most modern type and is served by artillerists who equal those of any army in the world.

Varna, which is only 150 miles from Constantinople, is only ten miles outh of the Roumanian frontier. A railway runs from Varna direct to Dobric, in Roumania, the latter place being only 21 miles distant in an air line and forty miles by railroad.

Between Varna and the Roumanian frontier the land is rolling and fertile [illegible] the Balkan range, which in this instance would serve as a screen for the Russian expedieionary force pending the assembling of t strong army in the Balkan peninsula. The view is held in military circles that the Russia naturally would choose the north side of the Balkan range, range, for political as well as strategic reasons. It would enable them to keep in touch with the Roumanians, whereas in a landing to the southward of the range the German-Bulgarian armies could interpose between them and the Roumanians. The Russians having failed to receive the consent of Roumania to march through the latter country may have effected the same result by landing to the south of the Roumanian frontier, and in any advance have a line of connections with a neutral country and one from which they may hope to receive supplies. It is this last consideration which, it is believed, has outweighed any advantage to be gained by having effected a landing in the first place at Burgas.

MERRY CHRISTMAS, FULTON

Good cheer, Merry Christmas, in Fulton abound! Our little city in its whole history has of a surety never witnessed a greater out-pouring of gifts to those not happily provided. Charity has been the watchword of the season. Everywhere are individuals, clubs and organizations mapping out happiness for others, expressed in gifts or deeds of charity. The significance bearing upon the city is wholesome and inspiring, for when a people have learned to give great wonders may be worked. Each act with us was first in thought, and thoughts are things that live.

Of double interest is the following taken from Luke II.

"Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight and say unto him, Friend lend me three loaves. * * * Though he will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him as many as he needeth."

Which of us, in the movement for a bigger, better Fulton, shall fail to recognize the importunity—and give—not because of friendship, vain glory, or personal gain—but, for the giving itself.

In the rebuilding of our city many gifts will be needed—the greatest of which will be honest efforts, a sincere belief, in our fellowmen, and the recognition of a demonstrable principle.

In the dawn of a Merry Christmas may the cares that infest the city "fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away."

TELLING TROUBLES

There are thousands of men and women in this country who tell you of their troubles, who wail and weep, who kick and complain, and grumble over their financial situation. These people have gout in the head, and a grouch in the heart. They are sore at the world for the mistakes they have made themselves and are now paying for.

Give these people sudden money and they would wreck themselves. Expect them to get down to work, and earn it, and you are subject to disappointment. The only way to do with this bunch is to let them growl and grow old.

Contrast these prowlers and howlers with some human that is physically powerless to rise from a sick-bed, but who sends out to the world human documents of optimism, good cheer, encouragement. The next time you hear a well man finding fault with his condition, chloroform his conversation.—The Silent Partner.

Opinions

THE YOUNG MAN AND THE MINISTRY

The latest report from the Protestant Episcopal Church indicates a growth in church membership, but shows practically no increase in the number of its ministers and also shows a dearth of candidates for the ministry.

What is the reason that the profession, once counted the noblest of all, should be so shunned? We think the answer is found in the changed relation of pastor and people. A few generations ago the minister was looked upon as a superior being, a man "called of God." His word was held to be the expression of the Divine Law. He was the supreme authority on morals. He exerted a vast influence on political thought. His office was venerated.

The same Gospel is being preached today—or substantially the same. The pastoral office is still respected. But the clergyman no longer holds the same position of authority.

The widespread intellectual awakening has put the clergy on the defensive. No longer are their ex-cathedra utterances accepted at their face value. With the high note of authority gone, much of the glamour and attractiveness of the preaching office have been swept away.

It cannot be charged against the [illegible] of their own ideals is keeping them from the ministry.

But rather the discovery that their own ideals of service could find expression in other directions, that the great tasks of the day—such as stamping out pestilences, seeking to solve the differences of capital and labor, rendering honest, courageous public service—demand the highest and noblest effort.

If the ministry is to attract strong young men, a new significance must be read into the petition, "Thy Will be don ON EARTH as it is in Heaven."—N. Y. American.

AN EXODUS OF FEMINISTS

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch declares that she will go to Kansas to get the vote denied her in New York. It is her privilege. One great advantage of living in a country of forty-eight states is that one can always move over a border-line and find things different in one way and another.

But Mrs. Blatch does not expect to go alone. She sees herself leading an exodus of women bound to be free. She dreams of a following that may build a town, and that certainly will pay personal taxes. And she guesses that "that will take some money from New York."

Kansas is fortunate in being chosen as the goal and refuge of this embodied energy of feminism. Yet the Sunflower State may not preen itself too greatly upon the fact of choice. Idaho, Nevada and Oregon offer also the six months residence term which will entitle the ladies of the exodus to vote for a president in 1916. Kansas is selected only "because it is nearer."

Nearer, obviously, to New York. The old home is to be left and to be bereft of personal taxes, but it is not to be forgotten. In this thought a may find some grain of comfort. And besides, it is true that people who feel that they ought not to like New York may have a hard time appreciating Kansas.—N. Y. World.

THE HAPSBURG STANDS ALONE

Many American newspapers hold Germany partially responsible for Austria's stiff-necked reply to the Ancona note. News reports, however, say that the Kaiser is using his influence to melt the ice at Vienna. Of the two contentions the latter is the more plausible.

It is a mistake to conclude that Germany bosses her ally completely. The Hapsburg monarchy is historically haughty. Unmistakable evidence that Vienna handles her own foreign business may be found in the history of the Austro-Italian negotiations last winter. Thro Prince Buelow Germany made a determined, last ditch fight to bring her companions in the triple alliance to an understanding. Her envoys carried notes back and forth between Rome and Vienna indefatigably. The negotiations nearly succeeded, but struck a snag on a minor point which Franz Josef interpreted as a reflection upon Hapsburg prestige. Upon that rock of pride German mediation was wrecked. It may be wrecked again on the same rock, since our attitude may strike the senile emperor as altogether too brusque. Probably Franz Josef's obsession that the Hapsburgs are the cream of the earth worries Berlin more than it does Washington.—Little Falls Times.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

The Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the California Court decreed that Ethel C. Mackenzie when she married a subject of Great Britain, automatically lost her American citizenship and her right to vote.

Matrimony in equal suffrage states thus assumes a new hazard. Suitors of alien nationality will be henceforth weighted in the balance with the right to vote, and may be found wanting.

* * *

"Yes, I was the goat," said Congressman Page in reference to his being the man whose objection prevented the suffrage envoys from being heard on the floor of the House of Representatives, "Of course, none of the Western boys wanted to do it because of their women voters, but it won't hurt me down in North Carolina."

"Oh," remarked one of the many suffragists found everywhere these days about the Capitol, "since the women of his state can't vote for him, he doesn't care what they think."

The suffragists emerged from the reception accorded by President Wilson to the National Suffrage Association and the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage beaming and triumphant. In the suffrage line had been a thousand women and in the anti-suffrage line but two hundred. 'Rather looks as though women wanted to vote, doesn't it" chirped one of them.

The suffragists had another cause for satisfaction in the fact that the President received the antis in grave silence but assured the suffragists that he had under consideration the request made by them to come out for national suffrage for women.

The files of a rural paper reveal the difficulty attending the introduction of voting booths. One man is recorded as not being able to find the door and so crawled under to cast his vote. In a little city in western New York out of 1800 voters 1700 had to have extra and final instruction on how to fold the ballot and 300 [illegible] not dubbed as unfit to vote, why, asks the feminist, shouldn't women be given the same chance to blunder away at self government?

* * *

During the attack on Loos a seventeen year old girl, Emilienne Forean, attacked with signal success the theory that women ought not to vote because they cannot fight.

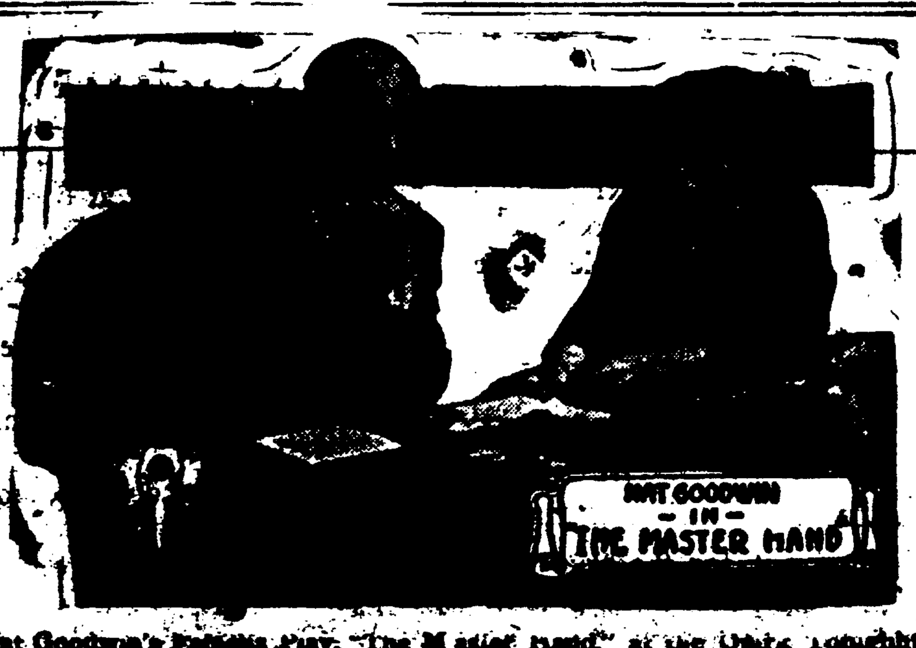
She killed three Germans with grenades and two more with the revolver of a British officer. She was awarded the Croix de Guerre by General Joffre.

ARE MASHERS INSANE?

The Brooklyn magistrate who avers that a masher is unbalanced in mind and should be put under observation is quite sure to have no mashing within his jurisdiction. He says:

"Any man who tries to make love to a woman as she passes him in the street is a fit subject for an insane asylum. I will see to it that all prisoners found guilty of that charge in my court are sent to the observation ward of the Kings County Hospital, where they may be constantly watched."

Of course in order to test the patient's mentality it would be necessary to trot by him a line of attractive maids. If it were required that he become oblivious to beauty the chances are that the suspect would be declared incurable. The dread of observation will do more to suppress the masher than the real test of observation.—Watertown Standard.



Nat Goodwin's Famous Play, "The Master Hand," at the Quirk Tonight.

AT THE QUIRK TODAY

World Film Corporation presents the five-part photoplay. "The Master Hand," based on Carroll Fleming's well-known drama of the same name, with Nat Goodwin in the leading role. When offered at the regular theatres of are country a few years ago, the drama was received with much applause.

Nat Goodwin is the star of the photoplay, which abounds in the most thrilling situations and incidents; it has an intensely gripping story and plot; is well cast and acted, and in respect of photography and production is a feature film of outstanding excellence.

Nat Goodwin has, in a sense, to be everything by turns and nothing wrong in this play. Plot and passion, perfidy and perjury all the sins of the decalogue appear to be either active or imminent in the story. Mr. Bigelow (impersonated by Nat Goodwin) is the agency by which all trouble is dispelled. Rallston, husband of a rich woman whom he dislikes, plots her death so that he can get possession of her money. A poisoning lady doctor, and the unscrupulous keeper of a private sanitarium are his tools.

The plotting and counter plotting that follow are bewildering in their sensationlism. Bigelow's is the "master hand" which straightens out all the turmoil and brings about a happy conclusion to the drama.

PROLOGUE.
AN ENEMY OF MANKIND.

THE strains of a wondrous cradle song died away slowly as Irving Randolph drew his bow tenderly down the strings of his violin. The love of music was written large in every feature of the young Englishman's face, but fate, making him the master of Randolph Towers, in succession to his deceased father, had spared him the necessity of earning his living with his violin.

He did not need the monetary reward of the genius who takes to the platform. Randolph Towers, set like a gem in the center of extensive estates, is one of the stately homes of England and has been the home of the Randolph family since the days of Edward the Confessor. The family had been large in former days, and there was wealth enough for all, but now the only remaining Randolphs were Mrs. Randolph, the gentle mistress of the Towers, and her two sons, Irving, the musician, and Robert, the spendthrift.

As Irving, tall and vigorous, evoked the hidden soul of his violin his younger brother, Robert, sat in a chair on the porch of the house and brooded over his "wrongs." Money was the burden of his thoughts. A life such as he was leading demanded a larger income than was Robert's allowance from the estate of his father, although in the hands of a young man not a spendthrift, addicted to wine and women and cards, it would have been more than ample. For his financial difficulties Robert blamed Irving, unjustly, for his elder brother had brought him out of many a scrape.

Gambling and affairs with women had made heavy drafts on Robert's finances. Inconstancy was ingrained in his nature, and he loved the spice of danger in his love affairs. His latest flame was Mrs. Kelton, the young and pretty and flirtatious wife of a neighboring county gentleman. Paying attention to her was toying with dynamite, for James Kelton's jealousy of his wife was the talk of the entire shire.

"I won't have any more of your going on with young Randolph or any one else!" he had stormed at her, but she had only laughed at him and called him "a poor, silly dear." Invitations were out for a reception at the Keltons' home, and the Randolph brothers were invited, much to Kelton's disgust.

Against Irving no word of scandal had been spoken. How could there be when he was engaged to be married to beautiful Ethel Porter, daughter of a neighboring county family, and showed plainly his devotion to her? The two were deeply in love with each other, and, though no date had been set for the wedding, it was understood that they would be married soon. Every day the young couple rode together over the fine roads of midland England.

"Well, I've got to see Irving," said Robert.

Both were good riders. Irving had the best seat and hands in the county. No fence was too high, no hazard too great for him. Next to his music his greatest love was good horseflesh.

Even as Irving drew the last strains from his violin Ethel was nearing Randolph Towers.

"Well, I've got to see Irving—there's no other way out," said Robert half aloud as he rose and entered the house. At the same time Irving laid down his violin and bow and left his room. Almost together the two brothers entered the drawing room. Mrs. Randolph was [illegible] first to reach his mother's side. Mrs. Randolph loved both of her sons, but it was plainly to be seen that the younger was her favorite.

"Robert, you are not looking well. Are you ill?" she asked, rising and putting her arms about him.

"No, mother," he replied impatiently, stepping away from her. "I wanted to see Irving." To Irving he said, "I'd like to have a few minutes' talk with you."

He took Irving aside, out of their mother's earshot. "Irving," he said, "I've got to have some money."

"You've had your allowance for this month," said Irving.

"I know it," said Robert sullenly. "And it's all gone. And I must have a hundred pounds to settle a few bills."

"I can't let you have it, Bob," said Irving. "It would be an injustice to mother. I've warned you time and time again against your extravagance."

"Are you quarreling, my sons?" the mother asked. "Irving, what does Robert want?"

"He wants more money, mother. He's had his month's allowance, and he has gone through it already. He wastes his money, mother, and I cannot let him have any more."

"Are you not too hard on your younger brother, Irving?" asked Mrs. Randolph. She went to Robert and tried to soothe him as he stood glaring at his brother, his face flushed and angered.

Irving turned away with a sigh. As he did so his glance passed through the open French windows of the drawing room, and the sight that met his eye drove from his mind all thought of his brother's financial difficulties. Along the broad road that led to Randolph Towers beautiful Ethel Porter was riding to join her lover. With a hurried "Excuse me, mother," Irving went to meet her. In the joy of the meeting the quarrel with his brother and his mother's unintentional injustice were quite forgotten.

While the lovers talked and made their plans for a meeting that night at Ethel's home a visitor of quite a different sort arrived at Randolph Towers. He sought Robert Randolph. In his pocket were certain papers signed by the young spendthrift. These explained the latter's anxiety and his demands on his brother for money. They were promissory notes for £100, made out to the order of Bart Nicholls. They were due, and Bart had come to collect his money or, as he put it, to "raise a fuss with the old lady." The debts were gambling debts and as such not collectable in law, but Bart knew that Robert, with all his faults, was no "welsher."

The Randolphs' butler announced Bart Nicholls. "Oh, dear, that man again! Robert, I do not like him; I wish you would not associate with him," said Mrs. Randolph.

"Oh, he's a good fellow, mother," said Robert, and he went out to greet his visitor.

The burden of their talk was money. Robert pleaded for time in which to meet the notes, giving his brother's "miserliness" as his excuse. It met with a sneer. "Why don't you go to your mother for cash?" asked Bart.

"She trusts too much in Irving," said Bob. "And he's so loyal to his majesty that he won't let anything with the king's head on it get away from him. Sh-h-h! Here he comes now."

Having parted reluctantly with his fiancee, Irving returned to the house and came face to face with the cronies. He frowned as he saw Bart. He had no reason to like his brother's associates.

It was not the first time that Robert had pleaded with his brother for money. Sometimes he had succeeded in getting it on false pretenses, but there was genuine distress in his voice now as he begged for help to meet those "cursed notes." "I've got to pay up, Irving; I've just got to pay. My friends know about them. I could never look them in the face again if I didn't pay up. If you help me this time I'll never ask you again. You wouldn't want to see me disgraced and sent to Coventry at the club, Irving, would you?"

With such arguments Bob won his brother over. There was doubt in Irving's mind as to the wisdom of paying these gambling debts of Robert. But the brotherly tie was strong. Perhaps the family honor of the Randolphs was involved, and there was the aging, widowed mother to consider. After all, the estate was large and could meet even Robert's incessant demands for money.

So Irving yielded. And his scapegrace younger brother repaid him by going out that night on a drunken orgy with Bart, while Irving, troubled in mind, was charged by his sweetheart with neglecting her. But the lovers' quarrel ended, as their quarrels always did, in reconciliation and kisses.

The home of the Keltons, a pretty little place not far from Randolph Towers, was aglow with lights one evening a few weeks after Irving had settled his brother's gambling debts. Mrs. Kelton was giving a reception, and among the invited guests were Ethel Porter and Irving and Robert Randolph. For months Irving had known of his brother's infatuation for the pretty Mrs. Kelton. It was no secret. All the county knew that she numbered Robert Randolph among her conquests and that her husband looked with a jealous eye on her flirtations. There had been no open break between the two. Kelton could accuse his wife of nothing worse than flirtatious desire to keep the young man dawdling at her side.

Kelton warned her: "Your guests will talk about you. Let young Randolph alone this evening."

"Very well, my dear," she had promised. But the light in the conservatory was dim, and perhaps both Mrs. Kelton and Bob had had just one or two glasses of wine, and their heads were just a wee bit too close together when Kelton came seeking his wife.

To Kelton's credit be it said that he spoke not a word to his wife or to Bob Randolph. He did not even look at the young man as he offered his arm to his wife. The young woman could do nothing but accept his escort back to the parlor, to her neglected guests. They left Bob standing sheepishly in the conservatory, but he was not alone long. Only a minute after the Keltons left Irving entered.

"Bob," said he, "you know this won't do. I just passed Kelton and his wife, and his face shows how angry he is. He's insanely jealous of her, and there'll be an explosion if you don't quit flirting with her."

Bob interrupted him with an angry exclamation, but he went on:

"Perhaps you mean no harm, but Kelton doesn't see it that way. We're lucky he didn't make a scene tonight. For mother's sake, Bob"—

"You'd better go back to Ethel and let my affairs alone, Irving. I can manage them myself."

And with that Bob flung himself out of the conservatory, to spend the rest of the evening sulking in a corner, while flirtatious Mrs. Kelton for once remained discreetly near her husband.

* * * * * * *

It was some weeks later that the explosion came. Despite Irving's warning and Kelton's open jealousy of his wife and dislike of Robert Randolph, the young man and the woman continued to play with fire. The burning came one day when Mrs. Kelton and Robert met by arrangement in a restaurant for luncheon. There had been a telephone talk after Kelton had seemingly left his home. An appointment was overheard at the one end by the jealous husband and at the other by Irving.

But Kelton restrained his turbulent heart and watched his wife go out without interference; then he followed.

As was his wont when troubled, Irving turned to his violin for comfort. But the melodies would not come; his hands seemed to have lost their cunning when his mind lost its rest. So he laid by the violin and the bow and followed Robert and Mrs. Kelton and the injured husband to the restaurant.

Intent only on themselves, Mrs. Kelton and her companion were shown to seats. Under the pendent cloth Robert grasped the woman's hand and pressed it.

"You silly boy! Some one will see us," she said, but she made no attempt to withdraw her fingers.

"Isn't it a jolly lark, lunching here, just you and I together?" said the infatuated young fellow. The head waiter, all attention, came for his order and sent it to the chef. Then he hurried away to the entrance to direct to a seat the monocled, frowning, burly man, who asked for "a seat near that young couple there." And a few minutes later, when the head waiter had shown Irving Randolph to a seat near by, the stage was set for the tragedy.

For a few minutes Kelton watched his wife and Bob laugh and talk, and then his patience broke. He rose with a muttered oath and moved quickly to the side of his wife's table. She was too intent on Bob and he on her for either to notice Kelton's arrival, and he stood there several seconds before the woman looked up and met her husband's eye. There was just a tiny shriek as she rose, and Bob, seeing Kelton, rose also.

"You cur!" said the older man, and he lifted his cane to strike at Bob. The cane was caught by Irving, who had stridden quickly to the table. Before the older brother could say a word Kelton turned on him in fury. "How dare you interfere between this whelp and me?" he exclaimed.

Irving held his arm firmly and tried to calm him. Mrs. Kelton had sunk back into her seat, and Robert, fearing to face the music or perhaps perceiving a favorable opportunity to escape, ran rapidly to the door and left the restaurant.

By this time the place was in a turmoil. The guests had risen and had formed an inquisitive ring about the woman and the two men. The head waiter forced his way through the circle and parted Irving and Kelton, protesting volubly that his highly respectable restaurant was no place for two gentlemen to settle their differences.

Unfortunately for Irving and luckily for his scapegrace brother, there were two newspaper reporters in the place, and these men arrived on the scene of combat too late to note the preliminaries and the escape of Bob. They got only the names of Kelton and Irving, noted Mrs. Kelton cowering in her seat and built their "stories" around these facts.

And the next day the newspapers proclaimed in large letters:

PROMINENT CLUBMEN IN PUBLIC QUARREL

IRVING RANDOLPH AND JAMES KELTON FIGURE

MRS. KELTON'S NAME MENTIONED

Society Will Be Shocked to Learn of the Quarrel, Etc.

Injustice trod close behind the footsteps of Irving Randolph, thus pilloried in the public gaze. Not only was his beloved mother shocked and grieved by the scandal, but his friends began to "cut" him whenever they met him. Robert's attitude was maddening, and it required all of the elder brother's self control to avoid a violent break with him. Relying on Irving's regard for their mother, Robert showed that he was not afraid of any disclosure.

His Cane Was Caught by Irving.

Worse than all, a too friendly and officious friend of Ethel Porter hastened to bring the tidings to her. At the first word Ethel put her fingers on the friend's lips and said:

"I can't believe it of Irving. He is true to me."

But the sight of the newspaper headlines and the sensational story convinced her that Irving had been false to her. That same evening he rode over to call upon her and was met with cold scorn. In vain he protested to her that he was innocent, but his loyalty to his brother prevented him from naming the real culprit.

Ethel, blinded by wounded pride, would not see, and the meeting of the two ended in the return of the engagement ring.

That night Irving sat long in his room with his beloved violin. Now high, now low, sounded the notes of the music played by a master hand, voicing the passion of anger justly roused or the quiet mood of despair. He breathed his very soul into his music.

Only one friend, John Kent, proved his faithfulness to Irving at this trying time. In his trust Irving found consolation. "Buck up, old man!" said Kent, a bluff, hearty Englishman, somewhat older than Irving. "They'll all know some day that Kelton had no cause to suspect you. And Ethel will be sorry she threw you over."

But the weeks passed, and Ethel did not relent, even when she met Irving at a gay house party on the Thames bank given by a mutual friend. Among the other invited guests were Irving and Robert Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Kelton and John Kent. The gay Mrs. Kelton was somewhat subdued after the scene in the restaurant, but she retained enough of her vivacity to smile at Robert when her husband's back was turned. Kelton did not see Bob, but turned his head just in time to catch Irving's eye and glare at that innocent young man.

Ethel's face showed traces of her mental suffering, but she would not listen to Irving when he tried to plead with her.

"You have betrayed my confidence," she said, "and I cannot trust you again."

"But, Ethel, I have sworn to you that you are mistaken; that I am innocent. You always believed in me in the past. What more can I say to you than I have said?"

"Mrs. Kelton was in the restaurant with some one other than her husband," said Ethel. "He found you there. If there was any other man, who was he?"

Again the loyalty to the family name checked Irving. "If you will not take my word that I am innocent it will be of no use for me to try to convince you," he said sadly and turned away to rejoin the party on the lawn, while Ethel sought forgetfulness in a comfortable armchair and a book.

Song and talk and merry chaff filled the pretty scene on the lawn. Robert, for all his faults, knew how to make himself agreeable and was the life of many a group. Irving, tall and athletic, thoughtful and somewhat reserved, was hardly less popular. The courses of the brothers generally lay far apart, but they swung together in a far corner of the grounds, where a group of men were testing their skill at target shooting.

The range was long, and at the farther end was a small hill into which went the bullets which missed the target. In the shooting party were some good shots; both Irving and Robert were skilled with the rifle, but the former had devoted more time and attention to revolver shooting, and he had attained high proficiency with the shorter weapon.

Hit after hit evoked applause. The guests shot in turn, and as there were many desirous of trying their skill and as Robert and Irving were late in joining the shooting party, it was some time before their turn to shoot came. Robert flitted from group to group, exchanging comments on the merits of the marksmanship displayed.

Kelton was not numbered in the shooting party. His tastes did not lie in that direction; perhaps the monocle which he affected and which was continually falling from his right eye affected his aim. Besides, he had occasion to keep not only both eyes, but also the monocle on his vivacious consort. The little woman could not restrain her propensity toward flirtation. Her favorite subject, Robert Randolph, having escaped for the nonce from her wiles, she cast about for another victim.

But, unhappily, she chose a time when her husband was watching her, and her merry talk and glances did not escape him. As had been the case so many times in the past, her conduct led to a violent quarrel.

"First there was that Randolph fellow; now it's this chap. This will have to stop," he warned her, and for the thousandth time she denied any wrongdoing and quarreled with her husband. It ended, as it always did, in his leaving her and going for a walk to cool off his rage.

His way led him back of the rifle range. Oblivious to his surroundings, conscious only of his anger against his wife, Kelton walked on.

There was a little squabble in the group at the range, now reduced to Irving, Robert and Kent. Selfish and inconsiderate as ever, Robert insisted on shooting first, and thus it came about that it was Irving's turn just as Kelton appeared behind the head of the range. Through the shrubbery his form was dimly visible. It was hardly perceptible—one could barely see that something was there, without discerning the details. John Kent's quick eye caught it first. As Irving pulled the trigger Kent exclaimed:

"My God!"

But it was too late. Irving had fired, and the bullet sped past the target into the heart of James Kelton. He whirled about and fell, dying just as Kent and the brothers rushed to him.

"You've killed him, Irving!" said Kent.

Into the heart of Robert Randolph entered an evil, fratricidal purpose: Kelton killed—Irving accused of willful murder—convicted on the damning evidence of the quarrel in the restaurant—he himself, Robert, in possession of the family estates—

"Well, you've done it, Irving," he said.

"What do you mean, Bob? Do you mean to say that I shot him intentionally?"

"It looks that way. You did it deliberately, and I'll not lie to save your life!"

The words roused Irving from the half trance in which he stood. With an oath he rushed at his brother, and before Kent could drag him off he had choked Robert half to death. In his rage he would have made himself really guilty of murder had not his friend by main strength dragged him off.

By this time the alarm had spread among the members of the gay house party. There were hurrying to and fro and talk in whispers and the dispatch of servants. Only a few minutes passed before the body of James Kelton was borne to the house, the hysterical widow was led away by friends, and the party broke up.

Throughout the horrors of those few minutes Kent stood steadfast at the side of Irving Randolph.

"You must get away from here quickly!" he said to the young man. "It looks bad for you. Come, we will go to the stables!"

Before the stableman knew of the tragedy he was summoned to saddle in haste the best horse he had for Irving. Kent saw to it all. He advised Irving where to go and what to do. He emptied his pockets of cash. He helped Irving to mount. He saw that the young man rode away like the wind. Before the officers of the law in the neighboring county seat knew of Kelton's death Irving Randolph was far on his way to the nearest seaport, to catch a steamer bound for Australia.

He stopped at a little town en route to change his clothing, sell the horse and make all the changes in his personal appearance his few precious hours permitted. He bought a monocle and practiced many hours in the art of holding it in his eye, confident that its adoption would help in his disguise.

Fortune favored him. He reached port just in time to catch a steamer bound for the antipodes. Fortunately the vessel was not equipped with wireless, and she was out of reach before the alarm reached the seaport.

* * * * * * *

Irving Randolph, innocent of intentional wrongdoing, remembered with horror by his friends, all but the faithful Kent, and by Ethel Porter, the girl he loved, was bound for Australia. Back in England remained the sorrow stricken mother and the faithless younger brother. To Bob was intrusted the care of the estate by Mrs. Randolph.

"You are all I have left now, Robert," she said to him. And with black deceit in his heart, Robert Randolph, knowing his fugitive brother to be innocent of the crime charged against him, lied to his mother, saying:

"I will take care of the property and of you, mother."

He meant to continue his evil course now that Irving, formerly the chief obstacle in his path, was removed.

* * * * * * *

The bush country in the "back blocks" of Australia is desolate territory, fit for neither man nor beast. In its unexplored wildernesses are many places wherein a daring outlaw may hide and defy the law. All he needs is a speedy horse, a steady seat, a good eye for rifle or revolver, inexhaustible endurance and a determination not to be taken. Another thing is requisite, a faithful partner.

All of these things Irving Randolph acquired within a few months after landing in Sydney and proceeding to the interior of the island continent. He felt himself an outlaw, an Ishmael, with every man's hand raised against him, and he was embittered by the injustice of his exile and condemnation.

Newspapers told him of his conviction in the eyes of the public and the law. He could return to England only with a noose about his neck, and this added to the bitterness of the war with which he preyed on the interior settlements of Victoria and New South Wales.

Honest pursuits were not for him. He feared that he would be recognized, apprehended and dragged back to England.

Within a short time the exploits of "Stingaree," as he called himself, and his chum Howie, eclipsed the notoriety of Thunderbolt, Ned Kelly, Morgan and Ben Hall and the other "bushrangers" or highwaymen famous in Australian history. Stingaree saved his chum Howie, the big, black bearded man, from the police, and thenceforward the rough, swearing, ruthless outlaw was his devoted follower.

The name and fame of Stingaree spread throughout Australia after his first holdup of a stagecoach. After relieving the travelers of their valuables and taking the mail bags for the sake of the newspapers which they contained Stingaree posted on a tree a notice, which read:

"THUS BEGINNETH STINGAREE, THE ENEMY OF MEN, TO COLLECT HIS DEBT FROM SOCIETY. WATCH FOR HIM. YOU WILL FEEL HIS STING AGAIN AND OFTEN."

No matter how hard pressed he was, Stingaree made it a cardinal point of his policy never to take human life. He impressed the same view on the ruthless Howie. He was a highwayman and robber, but he drew the line at killing, even in self defense.

Strange as it may seem, Stingaree, most daring and most hunted of outlaws, never forgot his music. Ill fortune sometimes robbed him of his beloved violin, and he replaced it with a melodion, a phonograph or even a music box. But when the chase after him slackened and he could make a raid on a town shop for a violin or purchase one his evenings in camp with Howie saw him drawing again the sweet strains from the strings.

And at such times the soft melodies would call before the hunted outlaw the visions of happy old days in England with his sweetheart. Against the background of the Australian bush rose her sweet face, and then, and only then, except when he thought also of his mother, would Stingaree wish himself back in the old country.

XMAS NUMBER OF ORACLE

Many Bright and Original Writings Are Found in This Issue of Little School Magazine.

The entire staff in charge of the High school paper, The Oracle, is deserving of considerable credit for the splendid Christmas number which has just been issued.

Made up in forty-odd pages, with a goodly sprinkling of grinds, it is possible to forsee a popular demand for the paper.

The introductory article is entitled "The Little Freshman and The Spirit of Chrristmas", and is written by M. E. B. '18, The article is splendidly composed. M. A. G. '17 follows the opening article with a story on getting advertisements for our school paper, which is amusing.

Answering the editor's call for quantity more than quality, Ignatz '15 tells of the troubles of one McCarthy and although the story is longer than ordinary school paper story it has the snap and the editor should have no regrets.

Under alumni notes, the following former students are mentioned Ronald Allen, Alfred Edgarton, James Fairgrieve, Thomas Hopkins, Thomas Johnston, William Kilbourne, Edward LaPorte, Harold Hopkins, Howard Parsons and Byard B. Webb.

A review of athletics, together with exchanges from other school papers and half a dozen pages of "grinds" concludes the number.

The staff of The Oracle is made up of thef ollowing: Editorial—Nicholas L. Wallace, Editor-in-chief; Elizabeth Royce and Joseph Mangeot, Assistant Editors. The associate editors, are Harold Martin, Donld F. O'Brien, K. Francis O'Hare, and Margaret Byrne.

GOOSEBONES MET DIRE DISASTER

Foster Brothers for the Scouts in the Limelight---Roughness Overshadowed by Good Passing.

A large number of spectators attended a good exhibitionof basketball last night at Church's Hall, in which the Maccabee quintet easily scored a decisive defeat on the Goosebone team of Oswego. Score, 31-23.

A preliminary game bettew the newly organized State St. Athletic Association team and the Methodist Boy Scouts was won by the latter latter through the superior playing of Leon and P. Foster. Singleton and Allen made the points for the Athletic Association team.

Although being at most times rough, the preliminary game was interesting and some good passing and shooting was exhibited by the members of both teams.

In the main event, the Maccabees assumed the lead from the start when after about a minute of play Smith of the Maccabees dropped the ball into the net for the first score. Several baskets by members of the local team followed in quick order. The Maccabee team was not headed and the first half ended with the score 9-6 in the Fulton team's favor.

The second half started off with a rushand with both teams speeding up their play baskets were scored in repeated order. Ives and Crockett alternating in rolling up points for the Maccabees. Towards the last few minutes of play the Fulton team with a safe lead of twelve points was not forced to score and the remainder of the game was spent in guarding the Oswego players closely. Notwithstanding this, Mars, the star right forward of the Goosebones managed to evade the Maccabee guards time and again, shooting baskets from every angle. His running mate, Cinnamon, furnished valuable assistance and he, himself, broke into the scoring column for a total of five baskets.

Cinnamon and Mars were easily the stars of the Goosebones outfit, both being basketball players of high order. The entire Maccabee team performed creditably—and no mension can be made fo any particular stars.

The general all-around playing of O'Brien and Rohrbaugh assisted in bringing the team work to a plane where a victory was to be expected.

The lineup in the preliminary game was:

Methodist Boy Scouts		State St. A. M.
P. Foster	Right forward	Singleton
Leon Foster	Left forkard	Allen
Pooler	Center	Draper
Fitch	Left guard	Taylor
Church	Right guard	Bryant

Referree—Martin. Time of halves—20 minutes.

The lineup of the second game wast

Goosebones		Maccabees
Mars	Right forward	Ives
Cinnamon	Left forward	O'Brien
Stevenson	Center	Crockett
Johnson	Right guard	Rohrbaugh
Sheeley	Left Guard	Smith

Referee—Morin. Scorkeepers—Washburn. Time of halves—20 minutes.

TARDY BOWLERS CAUSE POSTPONEMENT OF GAME

The City League bowling match scheduledfor last night at the Onyx alleys, between teams representing the N. G.'s captained by Painter and the Onyx A. C., was postponed to a later date owing to the failure of several of theb owlers on both teams to make their appearance.

Interest is keen in the final outcome of the tilt between those two teams as the leadership in the league standing is at stake. If two victories are scored on the N. G. team it will mean a drop into second place for them.

There will be no League match tonight, theg ame scheduled for tonight having been bowled Wesnesday.

ELECTRIC LIT FARMS BECOMING POPULAR

Kansas Instructor Looks For End of Old System.

Manhattan, Kan.—Use of electricity on the farm for the sake of convenience, safety or comfort is urged by G. G. McNair, instructor in electrical engineering in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

"Twelve years ago farm lighting plants were a novelty; today they are rapidly growing in popularity," says Mr. McNair.

"They are usually operated by a gasoline engine, but in the eastern states, and especially in the Appalachian mountains, it is not uncommon to see water power used for this purpose. Where the people have water power the storage battery is not used.

"In every state where farmers care at all for convenience one will find a number of lighting plants. Some farmers prefer the blaugas, acetylene or gasoline lighting systems, so that they may utilize the heat, but there is a certain element of danger in using these systems.

"Plants, including engine, generator, battery and switchboard, can be bought for $134 up. Such plants are of very small capacity, will operate only a few lights and must be charged every day."

CAN'T PROVE HE'S DEAD.

Will of a Man Missing Twenty-one Years Offered For Probate.

Denver.—For the first time in the history of the Denver county court the will of a man of whose death there is no record has been lodged with the clerk of the court. It may become necessary to have the maker, George T. Sheets, declared legally dead before the instrument is offered for probate.

Sheets, a contractor, made the will in 1893. He was then seventy-two years old. A year later he disappeared. The family did not know of the existence of the will until recently, when Attorney Edwin Parke discovered the document in his safe. Parke turned it over to the clerk of the court.

WED UNDER WRONG NAME.

McCurdey Repented; Ceremony Over Again.

Lamar, Mo.—An unusual marriage ceremony took place here recently when Mr. and Mrs. Roy McCurdey were married for the second time, though they never had been divorced.

Four years ago McCurdey came to this section and, for a lark, he says, assumed the name of Roy Roach. Under that name he courted and wedded Rosa Rector, a Lamar girl. A short time ago he admitted that his right name was McCurdey. The young woman's parents insisted that the marriage ceremony be pronounced again and that the right name be used.

In addition to the county levy $77,191.54 must be raised in the county for the State tax.

Mexico Tax Rate

Supervisor W. H. Harris of Mexico made the following explanation and comparison as showing the necessity of a high er tax rate this year than last year:

Highway tax 1915, $3,218.55; 1916, $3,403.16; Snow and miscellaneous fund, 1915, $500; 1916, $700. State tax, 1915, $127.26; 1916, $2,922.95. County levy, 1915, $9,941.07; 1916, $11,066.55. Vote by special town election for bridge in levy for 1916, for refund tax and school superintendent 1916, $107.55. The total for 1915 was $13,786.88, and in 1916, $20,700.21, a difference of $6,913.33.

Mr. Harris says that this exceptional budget could not have been avoided as all the levies are either statutory or absolutely necessary.

Committees Appointed

Chairman Siver announced the following committees.

Highways committee—Supervisors Vincent, Wallace, Vant.

Tuberculosis Hospital Auditing committee — Supervisors Harder, Jackson and Woods.

Committee to Settle with the County Clerk—Supervisors Gayer, Duane, and Barker.

Committtee to approve Journal—Supervisors Maddox, McNamara and Martin.

Farm Bureau committee—Supervisors Fuller, Arnold and Jackson.

Outing committee—Dr. J. M. Terry, R. W. Shultz and C. W. Hamer, The Board adjourned until December 29th.

Supervisor W. J. Dowling of Redfield said today that he regretted the injection of the petition for a change in the route of the county highway between Redfield and Williamstown, filed recently with the Board of Supervisors. He regards this petition as having been the reason for the route not being included in the list to be improved nex t year, and adopted a few days ago. He states that he has no personal interest in the matter but regrets that the petition was filed and the road delayed. He believes that the road will not now be built for at least another year.

Yesterday Morning's Session

Mr. Pierce offered the report of the committee on miscellaneous accounts, showing that the amount claimed was $45,687.85, and allowed, $45,578.60. There is an increase over last year, due to the fact that refunds amounting to over $4,000 had to be made to the O. & W. and N. Y. Telephone Co. on account of erroneous assessments on franchises.

Action deferred until afternoon session.

Mr. Inman presented the report of the committee on town and county charges. Rule suspended and report adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Ther esolutions offered yesterday relating to board of prisoners, repairing the county automobile, appropriation for tuberculosis hospital, were carried.

An increase of $100 in the appropriation for expenses of the Sealer of Weights and Measures was made in a resolution offered by Mr. Fuller, The original amount asked was $150.

By Mr. Callison—That route No. 30 of the State highways running from Hannibal to Southwest Oswego, be recommended as next for improvement. Mr. Hall joined in the resolution.

By Mr. Harter—That the resolution be referred at the highway committee. Carried.

By Mr. Fuller—Providing for a committee of three on farm bureau. Carried.

Mr. Callison offered the report of the bonded debt of Oswego Town, as follows: Total debt for Minetto bridge, $23,000; principal and interest due in 1916, $3,967.50. Received and filed.

Mr. Dowling offered the report of a justice in Redfield. Received and filed.

Mr. Dowling offered the report of the committee to apportion taxes and make ratio. Rule suspended and report adopted.

The ratio for the town of Hastings is $1.68 general and 42 cents highway. The other ratios have been printed.

The reports of the committees to settle with constables and justices, settle with county clerk and settle with coroner, were taken up and adopted.

The total amount claimed in coroners' accounts was $2,973.01; allowed, $2,961.01. The coroners receiving the following: C. J. Vowinkle, $1,012.25; Dr. W. G. Babcock, $153.05; Dr. E. J. Cusack, $365.35; Dr. L. F. Hollis, $509.71.

By Mr. Lennox—Fixing the salary of the stenographer to the election commisosioners at not to exceed $40 per month. Carried.

By Mr. Riley—Fixing the compensation of inspectors, and other election officers in the cities of Fulton and Oswego, at $5 per day for general elections, primary elections and registration days.

Mr. Pierce inquired as to the wishes of the city supervisors.

Mr. Riley said that they were a unit for the proposition. He said it was hard to get men to serve at $4 per day, the present rate.

AN EIGHT YEARS' RECORD

A Test That Must Impress Times' Readers.

Over eight years is a long time.
A rigid test of merit.
Mrs. Hill testified over eight years ago.
She now says the results were permanent.
Can Fulton ask for better evidence?
Mrs. George Hill, 372 S. First St., Fulton, says: "One of the family complained a good deal of pains through the small of the back and seemed to be all out of sorts. One box of Doan's Kidney Pills cured the sufferer of backache and restored this one to good health. Another of the family suffered from sciatica and had trouble with the back. Doan's Kidney Pills acted splendidly in that case, too. (Statement given Oct. 25, 1906).

Mrs. Hill said: "The benefit Doan's Kidney Pills gave in our family has been permanent."

CHEER UP, BALDHEADS.

Few of Your Kind Are In Insane Asylums, Says Wisconsin Doctor.

Monroe, Wis.—Here is a grain of comfort for the baldheaded man: No matter to what extent they are compelled to bear the ridicule of their friends because of their shining domes the fact is that few baldheads are inmates of insane asylums.

This is the declaration of Dr. Robert B. Clark, who has made a lifelong study of insanity and mental diseases.

"I have examined several hundred patients regarding their sanity," said Dr. Clark. "I have had the opportunity of studying many hundreds of others in the asylums of the country and in all of my experience I have yet, with a single exception, to see an insane man who was baldheaded."

Is a Constructive Agency in the Life of This Community

It is the mechanical force behind the Chamber of Commerce movement to rebuild this city of "diversified opportunities," and in the care that is to be bestowed upon the rising generation. The lesson to be learned in the machine here pictured is the coordination of its more than 3,800 parts which go to make up a triumph of a centralized force for good in community building for Fulton.

FORESIGHT IN CITY PLANNING.

Great centers of population, when once they take a place on the map, should make a close study of their advantages. No important city at the start is made to order, though one, like Washington, may be laid out on paper with a comprehensive general plan. But it was long before the national capital had a farsighted man like Shepherd to get back to original intentions and push through measures for practical work.

In Paris Baron Haussmann was compelled to tear down and clear away many blocks of buildings and create a new system of streets before he could make over the sections that had become blemishes and dangers to public health. But to demolish an old city to construct a new one is not the best way. The farsighted method is better and costs less.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

PLAYGROUNDS IN WINFIELD.

Kansas Town Was Awarded First Prize In Child Welfare Contest.

To Winfield, Kan., was awarded the first prize of $1,000 by the department of child welfare of Kansas university in a contest among the second class cities of the state to determine which of them was doing most toward the betterment of children. Writing in the American City, Earl H. Taylor tells what Winfield is doing in the way of children's playgrounds. He says:

A three way development of the child is being attempted in Winfield, adjudged the leading city in child welfare work in Kansas. The ordinary school curriculum is re-enforced by physical and artistic courses that begin with the first grade, or kindergarten, and do not end until the child leaves the high school. The result, the city hopes, will be the production of well balanced men and women, developed mentally, physically and socially.

All year play directors—a young man for the boys and a young woman for the girls—look after the physical cultivation of the children. The city has a centrally located playground, equipped with slides, horizontal bars, swings, tennis courts and running tracks. A swimming pool is near by. Smaller group centers, also provided with apparatus, are scattered about the city, so that one is well within reach of every child. Boys and girls use the playgrounds together, one of the physical directors, sometimes both, being always present during the play at the larger grounds. All of the school buildings are equipped with gymnasiums, which are used when the weather is not suited for outdoor sports. A jackknife club, kiteflying contests, hiking and fishing trips and baseball add to the boys' summer amusements, while hikes across country and a daily story hour are features of the girls' recreation. The children's growth and all other physical phases are carefully charted and compared with the average, and if defects are found these are remedied at once.

American Civic Association.

The eleventh annual convention of the American Civic association will be held at Washington Dec. 28-31 in conjunction with the second pan-American scientific congress. It will be a notable meeting for the discussion of a variety of subjects relating directly to the physical improvement of towns and cities. Especial attention will be given to the important subject of town and city planning, with particular reference to the needs of the smaller cities. The American Civic association is extending a general invitation to all organizations and individuals interested in civic affairs to attend its convention. Notable among the distinguished guests attending the convention will be Lord and Lady Aberdeen from England, who are traveling in this country and who will contribute to the interest of the convention not only by their presence, but by participating in the program.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

HOW A SMALL CITY CAN BE BEAUTIFIED.

Frank Koester Gives Allentown Citizens Plans For Improvement.

Mr. Frank Koester, consulting engineer of New York, who has been retained by the city planning commission of Allentown, Pa., to make a report and plans for the remodeling of the city of Allentown, a fast growing city of 62,000 inhabitants, at a recent banquet at the Elks' club in Allentown gave an interesting talk on the needs of the city.

He said with proper planning the city should have 100,000 population in ten years. He showed how the transportation facilities affect trade, how the trolley moved the business more up Hamilton street. Formerly it was between Fourth and Eighth. Now most is between Fifth and Ninth. He spoke of the changes in New York from Eighth to Thirty-fourth street, how values depreciated in the old section and how that should be guarded against in Allentown by providing proper transportation facilities.

Among other points brought out by Mr. Koester were the following: All overhead wires should go underground, as the streets are too narrow to carry any obstructions.

All awnings, show cases, etc., should be removed from the pavements.

Advertising signs should be no lower than twelve feet and should show symmetry.

Window displays should be artistic.

More light should be supplied for the streets. The present lights were secured because they were cheapest, but improved lights and more are necessary to make the city more attractive.

The approaches to the city should be widened. The Bethlehem pike approach should be eighty feet wide. This can be done by condemning property, which is cheaper now than it will be in ten years from now.

He said Bethlehem was erecting a lot of houses for its workmen and urged that in order to keep ahead Allentown should build a garden city, the best place for this being on the Rittersville pike. He said in England they have comfortable three and five room houses, which rent from $42 to $52 a year and $55 to $70 respectively.

He said the city was spending $23,000 a year on temporary improvements and urged that more of this be put into permanent things. This city pays for its garbage disposal; other cities are paid for the garbage.

He urged that more parks and playgrounds were necessary in a city so closely built. In Germany the cities are large landowners. One city owns 90 per cent of the ground and builds houses for its people, and the venture is a profitable one.

STOP TREE BUTCHERY.

Protest Against the Vandalism of Telephone Companies.

Will the time ever come when the public will awaken to the fact that indefensible vandalism is practiced every day by the telephone companies, whose wires are strung along the country roads? says the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Driving along the public road one sees the tree butchers at work with ax, saw and pruning instruments, whacking off limbs which represent many years of slow growth and waxing beauty, cutting great, unsightly swathes through fine shade trees, lopping the tops out of some of them, sawing off all of the limbs on one side of others, destroying shade, destroying natural ornaments willy nilly. If the trees stand inside the lines of property adjoining the road it makes no difference to the mutilators. Everything that stands in the way of the wires must go. It requires a few men a few minutes to set up a telephone pole. It requires a half century to grow a fine tree. But the half century's growth is slashed where the wires run or where the pole is to be set, and the telephone line plows on, contemptuous of the beauty it mars and of the public which allows the damage to be done.

All public highways should be flanked by shade trees. As long as telephone companies are allowed to devastate every road upon which they set their poles tree planting along the public roads will be a waste of effort. If special legislation is needed to prevent the destruction of valuable public or private property such legislation should be passed. A way can be found to put a stop to the butchery when the public awakens to realization of the dollars and cents damage, as well as the injury from an aesthetic point of view that is done.

The trees along the roads and the space along the right of way are the property of the people of the section the road traverses. Trees are treated by the telephone companies as if they owned them.

Portray Town by Movies.

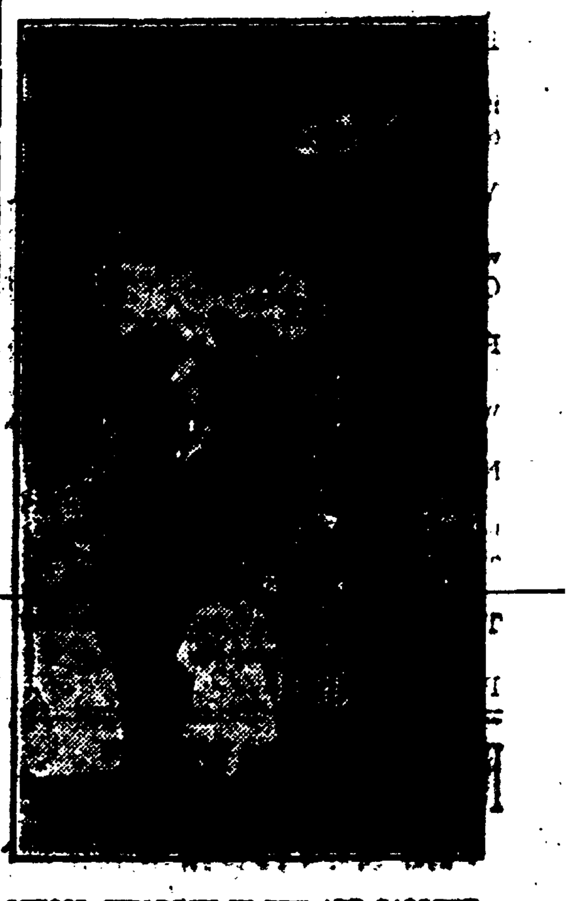
Through the co-operation of merchants of the town Brainerd, Minn., will have its picture taken in the form of movies. Plans are to be made to exhibit the films in different cities throughout the state, while local real estate dealers will be asked to show them in adjoining states. It is expected a large amount of valuable publicity will result.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSEUM AND GALLERY.

Reading, Pa., Has Such an Institution as Part of Educational Equipment.

A museum and art gallery as part of the equipment of a public school system is a rarity. One of the few cities credited with such an acquisition is Reading, Pa., which points with pride to its power and efficiency, writes Wallace E. Hackett in the American City.

In organizing this museum and art gallery Reading intended it to be a school museum, to be used in connection with high school work only, but it has outgrown its mission. Slowly and steadily the nucleus, obtained in 1904, was increased by such a large and valuable collection of material that the board of school directors in 1913 authorized the addition of an art department and made the exhibit a public institution. In 1909 the material obtained was first put into actual service. In 1914 Dr. Charles S. Foos, superintendent of schools, reported to the board of school directors that the museum and art gallery was open for inspection, and today the entire third floor and greater part of the second floor of the School Administration building are filled with the exhibit, and much more material is available.



SCHOOL CHILDREN IN THE ART GALLERY.

The museum and art gallery gives twofold service to the city of Reading. It gives citizens and visitors opportunities for viewing and studying worthy efforts in art and science, and through its medium the public schools of Reading teach the children not only art and science, but geography and history as well. The traveling cases contain exhibits of interest to children of the lower grades in the study of history and geography. These are distributed among the grade schools and serve to bring the classroom into immediate touch with the usefulness of the museum and art gallery.

SANITARY INSULAR CITIES.

Dr. H. R. M. Landis of Phipps Institute Speaks on Improving Slum Conditions.

That the cities of this country could very well copy the method of sanitation now in vogue in our insular and isthmian possessions and improve the conditions in the slum sections of every large municipality was said by H. R. M. Landis of Phipps institute, who addressed the Philomusian club of Philadelphia.

Dr. Landis, who has made a study of sanitation as it affects different countries, said the same conditions could exist in this country that obtain in Australia and Germany, which are models for others to copy. With proper supervision, adequate laws and enough money to carry on the work the local governments could work wonders in cleaning up their cities.

"Manila, Panama and Porto Rico are examples of what the government of the United States could do if the officials had a free hand to remedy conditions and full power to enforce regulations," said Landis. "Any city in the United States could do the same thing if plenary power were given and the people would stand for its exercise.

"There are cities in this country that pride themselves on sanitation, but they cannot compare with those of our insular possessions."

Great Publicity Campaign.

Following the annual meeting of the Georgia chamber of commerce at Macon, plans were made for the spending of $50,000 within the next three years in exploiting the resources and industries of Georgia. It is proposed to assess each county, city and town of the state on a basis of taxable values and urge them to come to the support of the chamber in the important work that it is doing. The subscriptions are to be based upon three years, and the money is to be used in conducting a great publicity campaign for the state through motion pictures, exhibition cars and direct newspaper and magazine advertising. Among other things which the chamber proposes to do is to employ a market agent and establish a freight bureau in charge of an expert.

That Week End Trip

Really it is a troublesome thing to pack up one's clothes for a short visit, perhaps more troublesome than to pack them for a long trip. A year or two ago, when skirts were scant and bodices flimy, one could get a week end wardrobe into a suit case without trouble. But now, when skirts are full and collars are high, sleeves are long and the fashionable fabrics are rather clumsy, the getting of enough clothes into the kind of luggage one is supposed to carry on a week end visit is something of a problem.

Week end trunks, which are large enough to hold a good many clothes and yet small enough for a porter to carry, small enough, too, to be stowed in an automobile, are useful for the short visit. But, lacking one of these, a big suit case and a small leather bag will do.

The woman who travels with little luggage must beware too many convenient cases. Attractive they may be, but they take up room that is often needed for clothes. Tissue paper answers the purpose of protecting one's frocks and takes less room than many of the rather cumbersome cases.

Take a thin negligee, a pair of the lightest sort of bedroom slippers—heelless cretonne or silk mules are a good choice—and lingerie that takes up little room. Really in this way a good deal of space may be saved. It is too bad, so far as the week end visitor is concerned, that petticoats have returned to style, for space must be left for a petticoat to wear with one's evening frock. However, this need not be bulky. The [illegible] petticoat may be worn under the street frock or suit.

Lingerie, stockings, necessary toilet articles and nightwear need not take up much room. The only shoes needed are a pair of evening slippers in addition to the street boots worn, unless sport shoes of some sort are needed.

It is quite possible to wear a serge frock under a big coat—a serge frock that will serve for morning and luncheon, for walking and motoring. Or a three piece suit may take the place of the frock and coat. One's hostess can always provide an extra coat for motoring if necessary.

If carefully packed, lingerie, night things and toilet articles can all be stowed in the small bag. This leaves the suit case for shoes and frocks.

Use plenty of tissue paper in packing the evening frock. Stuff out the sleeves and bodice with it and place a sheet of paper under the folds necessary to put the garment into the suit case. And don't pack the frock down with heavy things on top of it, especially if it is taffeta. A satin evening frock is a far wiser choice for the week end traveler.

A sweater, blouse and sport skirt can be placed first in the suit case, with the evening frock on top. Even in these days of full skirts a frock of satin and georgette crepe can be packed in small compass. And neither the crepe nor the satin wrinkles readily.

Most week end visits are made at short distances, and if one's bags are packed at the last moment before starting [illegible] and unpacked at the first moment after arriving at one's destination the clothes need not be long confined. They should be immediately shaken out and placed on hangers.

Baked Ham or Sausage.

Who has ever fried ham or sausage without becoming annoyed at the spattering of grease and smoke which filled the room? All this can be avoided by preparing the ham or sausage for frying and placing in a moderately hot oven. Bake for half an hour or until as delicately browned as desired. It will [illegible] is placed upon the table.

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse; The stockings were hung by the chimney with care In the hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there; The children were nestled all snug in their beds, While visions of sugar plums danced through their heads.

COUNTY AGENTS AID WOMEN

South Employs Women to Assist Their Sisters in Solving Home Problems.

Nearly 400 women county agents are now at work in the 15 Southern States. These agents assist the farm women in their territory in much the same way that their men colleagues assist the farmers. The work of the women has, however, been more recently inaugurated and is not, therefore, so well known.

At first these women devoted themselves largely to the formation and supervision of canning clubs. Now, however, much of their time is spent in home demonstration work with the mothers as well as with the girls. The opportunities that this field offers are illustrated by the recent meetings of a Virginia home demonstration club. The club was organized in June, with 12 members, which grew almost at once to a membership of 25. So many applications for membership came in that it has been necessary to form other clubs so that each organization may not be to large to do efficient work.

The fireless cooker was the first subject that this club took up. The construction of a homemade device of this kind, the cost of which was estimated at 25 cents, was explained to the members and its use demonstrated at the meetings of the club. After attention had been called in this way to the possibility of saving labor, time and fuel, and in addition having a more comfortable kitchen in many cases, other ideas were suggested and worked out by the women themselves.

"Joy Riding"

Among these the "scrubbing chariot" deserves attention. This consists of a comfortable padded frame mounted on four flat rollers, and enables the housewife to save a great many steps in wiping and scrubbing floors and cleaning woodwork. Its cost was estimated at 47 cents. Another convenience worked out at these meetings was a handy dustless mop for use on painted or polished floors. This was made of worn material which would otherwise have been thrown away and, consequently, was regarded as not having cost anything.

A companion convenience to the fireless cooker was the milk cooler or iceless refrigerator, which was constructed in general in accordance with the directions furnished by the department. The homemade shower bath, the roller tray wagon for use in carrying dishes from the kitchen to the dining table, and a folding ironing board and cover were among the other improvements suggested or developed as a result of these meetings.

The interest taken by the women in this kind of work is indicated by the fact that the county agents have now enrolled approximately 6000 farm women as home demonstrators. These demonstrators agree to adopt some household improvement and to furnish in this way an object lesson to their neighbors, or they agree to carry on certain demonstrations [illegible] been made in cooking, in improving sanitary conditions, in win[illegible]ing, in poultry work, and in home dairying. In addition, they [illegible] report to the county agent at the end of the year the results which they have obtained. These practical object lessons are most efficient [illegible] arousing interest and carry[illegible]tion. A Georgia woman, for example, who had been shown the use of the milk separator and better methods [of] butter making, wrote recently that some of her neighbors came for miles to see her churn. The fact, she said, that she was getting 30 cents a pound for her butter instead of 20 cents had done a great deal in making her neighbors want to learn to make better butter. The use of the thermometer, in particular, attracted their attention. Before seeing it in operation they had not considered the importance of having the cream at the right temperature. Incidentally, this woman wrote that her husband was taking much interest in the work and was planning how to fix the barn and shed room in order to aid his wife in her butter making.

This work has been in existence for about five years. It began with the organization of girls' canning clubs in two States in 1910. These girls' clubs, however, while important in themselves, were from another standpoint regarded as a stepping stone to further home demonstration work for the farm women. At the beginning of the movement one of the founders wrote: "The direct object is to teach some one simple straightforward lesson to the girls on the farm which will open the way to their confidence and that of their mothers, and which will, at the same time, open their eyes to the possibilities of adding to the family income through simple work in and about the home."

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

To Dress Up the Little Lady.

6532

Party frock of pink chiffon draped at the sides and having a girdle supported by shoulder straps of black moire ribbon.

Here is the way my little lady of fashion goes forth to her affairs of state—in a frock of chiffon, daintily draped at the sides as is mother's and a waist that is almost hidden by a deep girdle. There are also straps of moire silk and puff sleeves to make the miniature frock a more faithful likeness of the grown-up model.

For a miss of eight years the dress requires 4½ yards 36-inch chiffon, with ⅞ yard extra for ruffles. Two yards of moire ribbon will supply the shoulder straps.

The rules for making the dress are simple, but on account of the detail will have to be followed strictly. Beginning with the waist, close underarm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in back at notches. Center-back indicated by large "O" perforations. Underface upper edge of front and back about 1½ inch deep. Gather on crossline of small "o" perforations, and ½ inch below (if the high neck is desired, gather on upper line of perforations only and ½ inch below); draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape under gathers. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations and 1 inch above; adjust belt to position over gathers, center-fronts, center-backs and lower edges even (large "O" perforation indicates center-back), small "o" perforation at lower edge of belt at under-arm seam.

Adjust straps of material or ribbon ⅝ inch wide over shoulder as illustrated on reverse side of envelope, and tack the center of straps at lower edges, at the small "o" perforations in belt.

Next, close the seam of the short sleeve as notched and gather on crosslines of small "o" perforations. Draw gathers to the required size and stitch tape underneath. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations and sew in armhole at notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

For the skirt, close back seams from large "O" perforations to lower edges, finish edges above for openings. Turn hems at lower edges on double "oo" perforations; gather upper edges between double "TT" perforations. If skirt is desired with ruffles, cut straight strips of material 3 inches wide when finished; gather 1 inch from upper edges (forming a heading) and stitch to position along crosslines of single small "o" perforations. If skirt is desired draped at the sides, adjust stay underneath, bringing the single large and double small "oo" perforations to corresponding perforations in belt and skirt and omit the tunic.

The girdle comes last and is very simple to make. Turn under back edge on slot perforations; gather 1 inch from fold. Stitch boning 4½ inches long under gathers, drawing to fit boning. Adjust girdle, bringing single small and large "O" perforations to corresponding perforations in front, and lap lower back edge over lower edge of belt.

A touch of black is very modish upon chiffon frocks, and an opportunity is given for its introduction in the shoulder straps.

FISHING AND TOBACCO.

Pioneer Thinks They Helped Him in Reaching Green Old Age.

Grant, Mich.—Hinston Cole, a pioneer of Muskegon and Newaygo counties, who recently passed his one hundred and first milestone, thinks that his green old age is accounted for in part by the fact that for the last eighty years he has used tobacco moderately and always spent a goodly share of his time fishing.

Cole wanted to enlist for the civil war, but was turned down by Uncle Sam, as he was past forty-six years of age and too old for active duty. For eighty years Mr. Cole has enjoyed a local fame as the leading fisherman hereabouts.

Mme. Calve Makes Dolls For the Lafayette Fund.

MME. EMMA CALVE.

Thousands of toys, all the work of maimed French soldiers under the direction of Parisian artists, are now on exhibition and sale at the old Knickerbocker club, Thirty-second street and Fifth avenue, New York, under the auspices of the Lafayette fund, composed of more than a hundred well known New York men and women. Mrs. William Astor Chanler is the moving spirit in the movement.

From shelf, from stand and from packing case dolls look down in all the array of their "Sunday best," and beaus from Paris flirt outrageously with gayly dressed women from the provinces. who cannot trace their ancestors back as far as the old masters. The dolls range in price from 50 cents to $500.

The most striking and certainly the most costly piece of the entire collection is the "Algerian Wedding," a group which includes two dozen dolls and which is so correct in every part and detail that it would make a valued addition to a museum. The piece occupies one side of the room and is about six feet long. There is the Algerian house, open on one side, and through the arches the spectators can see the bridal scene. There are the family gathering in the corner, the bride in all her glad array, the dancing girls, the blacks, the musicians and the guests, all gathered awaiting the coming of the bridegroom, who is lounging in another room watching a chess game and drinking coffee with his friends. Architecturally the house is said to be perfect, and the figures are exquisite.

Mme. Charles Le Verrier, who brought the collection to this country, explained that in order to obtain this accuracy the heads of the dolls were made by French artists and were faithful reproductions of the Algerian cast of countenance. After the figures were completed they were shipped to Algeria and there dressed and grouped.

Mme. Calve has dressed three huge, delightful dolls in the costumes of her three famous parts—two from [illegible] and one from Carmen.

Mme. Calve's dolls are being sold at $1 a share, but each purchaser of a share is presented with an autographed photograph of the singer.

Part of the funds realized from sales in "Soldiers' Toyland" will go to buy kits, which cost $3 apiece. Each kit contains a suit of fleece lined undershirt and pants for winter wear, a gray wool muffler, an [illegible] belt, blue worsted gloves and [illegible], a pair of socks, a pad of writing paper [illegible] [illegible] men under [illegible] in the trenches.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

Sometimes you walk into a store and a clerk jumps to be the first to wait upon you. He is there to sell goods and work NEVER bothers him. He is willing to take down half the goods in the store in his efforts to please you. He makes sales and WILL RISE IN LIFE. But there is another class of clerks. They let you hunt them up when the BOSS IS NOT AROUND, show you as few goods as possible, and are not at all bothered if you walk AWAY WITHOUT FINDING WHAT YOU WANT. They get their salaries just the same—it is only the boss who loses. They will ALWAYS be clerks—JUST CLERKS.

Be it ever so humble; there is NO PLACE LIKE THE HOME TOWN. A youth leaving the burg where he was born, ever looks with longing eyes toward it. He may advance in the world until he lives in a palace, but the place of his birth will never cease to have its charm. He is interested in the people and his old chums there and ten to one is an avid reader of the HOME PAPER. But thise who remain, or those who come later to swell its ranks, cultivate a present community interest that is even more IMPORTANT than the absent treatment of the man in the city. THEY instead of DEPRECIATING it and looking for the 1st op- BE ZEALOUS OF ITS ADVANCEMENT; MUST GUIDE IT IN GROWTH LIKE A GOOD PARENT WILL GUIDE HIS CHILD. This intensified home town interest in WORKING WONDERS for American towns, which were thought to be on the down-grade less than ten years ago. People have been educated to build up the town, instead of DEIRECATING it and looking for the first opportunity to get out of it when something was not to their liking. People have been taught to make efforts to beautify it—personal effortss that combined make quite as likely a showing as municipal efforts. People have been educated to SPEND THEIR MONEY AT HOME, so that the TOWN MAY GROW IN BUSINESS, PROSPERITY that untimately is reflected to the buyers who keep the stores busy. People have been taught to BELIEVE IN THEIR HOME TOWNS, INSTEAD OF SOME DISTANT PLACE. The result is that the many thousands of home towns thruout the nation are prospering. Land about them is GROWING in VALUE. THE PEOPLE IN AND ABOUT THEM ARE HAPPIER.

The Chamber of Commerce is working OVERTIME to get things in working order in the City of FULTON, But if you NEGLECT to pay your DUES, we can't do very much after a while. Wake up; if YOU help us, we will help you. Is it not worth anything to you, to see the Battle Island Pulp and Paper Company reopened? Of course it is, but it costs money and you SHALL HAVE to pay those DUES.

The Chamber of Commerce is doing more for the common good of the City of FULTON than any other organization in the City. Wake up and join us.

How about having about one hundred or more fellows working in that Battle Island plant? Come on across with that money and let's give you returns.

Letter Day, Fulton Chamber of Commerce, December 30th, 1915.

Every man, woman and child is invited to write a letter to some friend or acquaintance OUTSIDE of FULTON, wishing this friend or acquaintance a HAPPY NEW YEAR. Now it is an acknowledged fact that all of us know some person outside of Fulton and we could write a letter and bring FULTON before the general public in a unique way.

We suggest a letter of this kind:

Dear . . . . :

This is the time of the year when we all remember our friendsand I take great pleasure in wishing you all the happiness in the year 1916, one person can wish another. Here in Fulton we have many reasons to feel happy; not only has business been good, but our City is a city of homes and our surroundings are so nice that we MUST feel happy, if we want to or not. We certainly are proud of our home town and we wished that you would be able to witness this some time.

We are beautifully located on the Oswego river and we have all the things one can desire.

We have for example the most unique Club House in the Country; it is located on an island in the river and you just can imagine what a fine time we are having there in the summer and how we can enjoy the beauties nature has bestowed upon us.

Really when it comes to the point, I must admit that I would not like to live anywhere else and I hope that you will find the time to visit us so that I may convince you that FULTON is the only city in which to live and be happy.

With many kind regards,

Sincerely

. . . .

You may make out of this letter what you please; write it in your own language, but do not forget to write that letter on December 30th, 1915.

Albert Haas Shot by Brother Who Aimed Revolver In Play

The funeral of Albert George Haas, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hass of South 6th street who was accidently shot by his brother, Leroy Hass, will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the home. The Rev. C. S. Robertson will officiate.

The untimely and tragic end of the lad's life has been a shock to the entire community. When the Haas and Brown families planned this celebration of a Christmas dinner at the Haas home the grim reaper was not bidden as a guest.

Leroy Haas, 14, and his brother, Albert, were dispatched on an errand to the Brown home. As they passed through a hallway leading into the dining room the lads discovered Patrolman Brown's revolver hanging in its holster from a hook on the wall. Leroy took the revolver and removed the cartridges, and supposing all were removed pointed the revolver at his brother and pulled the trigger. The next instant Albert lay dead at his brother's feet. One cartridge had not been removed, and the bullet had passed clear through the boy's head and landed in the woodwork beyond. The families hearing the shot rushed into the house, finding the boy beyond help. Coroner Cusack was called and a decision was given that death was due to accident.

Britain to Choose Between 2 Systems of Recruiting Army

London—A Cabinet council, which will be held today, is expected to take a decision on the question of whether the results of the Derby scheme of recruitment justify continued adhesion to the voluntary system or whether some form of conscription will become necessary.

This council should have been held on Friday, but Mr. David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, was engaged in an important munitions mission in the Clyde district. Hence the postponement until today.

It was suggested this morning that the conscriptionists are in a majority in the Cabinet and that should force be decided upon, some anti-script Ministers will resign, They, however, will not go to this extreme until all hope of assuring unity in the Cabinet is abandoned. Their scheme, according to the report, is to give the single men another chance for af ortnight, during which time the serious position would beb rought home to them and that if this scheme still failed to bring the men to the scratch they will reluctantly abandon their opposition to conscription.

Another solution to the prblem is a general election on the question, and it is stated that the Ministers have also discussed such a solution.

The Times military correspondent, who is evidently sceptical of the success of the Derby scheme, urges the House of Commons to insist in the coming debate that the government shall reveal the total deficit in the army, that is to say, reveal the difference between the establishments and the strengths. He infers that the battalions are not being kept up to their proper strength and that the whole question of the numbers abroad and at home needs close examination.

Battle Island Plant Resumes Operations In a Very Few Days

While particularrs concerning the reopening of the Battle Island sulphite mill remain a little obscure, sufficient knowledge is at hand to reasure the people of this City of an early resumption of activity at the big plant.

There is at the present time at least one man here who knows a lot about what is to take place at the plant, and this is N. L. Whitaker, president of the Chamber of Commerce. This gentleman has been working during the last two weeks to bring about a deal whereby the sulphite mill may resume operations and success finally crowned his efforts, with the rsult that on the eve of the great Christmas festival the mill was placed in the possession of Mr. Whitaker, president of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Whitaker was absent from the city today and Mr. Hollenga was reticent about giving out information, hence the impossibility of securing news of a more definite nature than the bare announcement of the early resumption of business at the mill. In spite of the sparsity of news joy reigns supreme in the minds and hearts of hundreds of men here who have despaired of the mill ever again getting under way; and last but not least, the news is gratifying to hosts of believers in the ability of a real Chamber of Commerce to get up and accomplish results.

With the mill in possession of the Chamber of Commerce whose president will convey it to the operators, there is of course every reason to believe that not less than 150 persons will be employed at the down-the-river plant, which fact, coming at a season of natural depression in local [illegible] would insure to the merchants of this city a large measure of [illegible]erity such as they have in former days known.

And [illegible] let us, everybody, give a "Long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together" for the Chamber of Commerce as it is today.

ALLIES' SUBMARINES PASS INTO MARMORA SEA

London—The Athens correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says that recent storms carried away the booms constructed by the Turks across the narrows in the Dardanelles, and that, profiting by the opportunity, many of the Allies' submarines passed into the Sea of Marmora.

Many heavy guns destined for the expedition against Egypt continue to arrive at Constantinople. The German staff at Constantinople is credited with the intention of mounting these guns behind sand dunes at a great distance in order to bombard and destroy the works at the Suez Canal.

Mr. Choate should know what he is talking about when he says that the United States is the most hated nation in the world. He served as ambassador to England, where the pulse of the world is taken. Nevertheless the smile which the Europeans put on while borrowing our cash looks just like the kind that won't come off.

'Tis said that kings and emperors and lesser potentates are on the firing line, but not one has yet struck an attitude and shouted: "A horse, a horse! My kingdom for a horse!"

Opera stars are invading the movie stage. Now, if the innovation works backward to the negro minstrels, there will be broad grinning both on and in front of the curtain.

The letter P may stand for "Peace," likewise for "Preparedness." It also leads off in "Push," which would be a good thing behind both of the foregoing desirables.

Of course the railroad heads knew all about the impending car shortage, but the anti-preparedness "noes" put it all over the "ayes" in the directors' councils.

If the immediate future is taken care of by new army plans the boy scouts will do the rest. Ten years hence they will constitute a mature and mighty force.

No sane man will growl at the new wrinkle if laundress or laundry will deliver his starched shirts unbuttoned, thereby sidetracking some profanity urge.

Courting and marrying must have come as a safe and sane distraction from notes to Europe, preparedness plans and the Villa and Carranza muddle.

This country is easily greatest among neutrals; but, then, there are so many of the others, and neutral rights play no favorites either for size or wealth.

About time for the professors to announce a correspondence school to train Mr. Wilson's "citizenry" army right at home.

Black molasses is supposed to be a thing of the past, but these factory pumpkin pies come out an unmistakable brunette.

It is reasonable to suppose that the Monroe doctrine will need to be rewritten somewhat and emphasized when the European war is over. America is being well advertised at present and if peace reigns here, with its usual adjunct of prosperity, while other countries are exhausting themselves, envious, not to say greedy, eyes will be cast westward. The doctrine is usually interpreted as applying to interference by European monarchies with republics already established here. But monarchies have possessions here which may become republics or may fall as prizes to monarchies which we prefer should not succeed the present owners—as, for instance, England and Holland. Mexico and the countries south are deeply interested in our development into a mighty world power. They may or may not remain trusted and complacent as the case now stands. A pan-American alliance in defense of the doctrine restated and up to date might add to its force before the world and at the same time make it no more aggressive than it is now popularly supposed to be.

MONEY AND THE NATION'S MORAL FIBRE

Are we growing too prosperous? Of course, many will say no. Many men of financial command are beginning to ask this question. We lose self-discipline when we grow rich. The greater accomplishments are generally the result of economical times. Many men owe their larger beginnings in life to a misfortune which took them from an existence of an easy salary or income and little of responsibility. There is such a thing as gaining wealth faster than it can be assimilated morally. Says the Annalist:

"In the crazy wealth-pyramiding period that ended in the flotation of the United States Steel Corporation, the destructive influence of money upon human character was spectacular. Men were money drunk. They had made by accident, by luck, or by acquisitive genius obnormally developed, more money than they knew how to spend. There is no school of spending to which the new rich can go, and the example of others only a few years older in wealth is very uncertain. These men of the steel period were pathetic. It was a fad among them to pension off their old wives and buy new and more expensive ones. They bought the most expensive they could find, and still were dissatisfied with the merchandise. They had to stop playing bridge and poker because the stakes couldn't be made high enough to be interesting without becoming, even to themselves, ludicrous. One traveled only by special train, his retinue, his horses, and his private orchestra being all as essential to his journeys as the hand-bag of ten years before. He had music with his morning tub. That man, still exceedingly rich, now lives in seclusion under the delusion that he has lost all of his money and has no friends. Several could find relaxation only in public debanchery, becoming, in cases international. The second generation was particularly unfortunate. These men of course would not know how to bring up their boys. One could think of nothing better than to make his boy like himself; and that young man could scarcely go from Chicago to New York without wrecking the interior of the Twentieth Century Limited. Everything was settled for afterward, of course, even the other cost to the young man— the cost that can not be expressed in money—for he died at the age his father was when he was born. Another son disliked going to school, and, being rich, why should he? So he grew to be a man, heir to a score or two of millions, hardly able to read and write. And this was all good average human material; in fact, much better than average. Sudden riches spoiled it. The punishment was terrific. Every period of wild money getting has had such aftermath.

The people on the whole are becoming very much richer than they ever have been. Stocks that paid no dividends are increasing in price. Stocks that paid dividends have gone to such figures that their holders have had prosperity suddenly dumped on all sides. We must not go into the errors that we cried out against in 1906. The lessons of ten years ago must not be forgotten.—Lexington (Ky.) Herald.

I WILL

You will succeed because you think success. You will fail because you fear failure.

You will unconsciously go in the direction of your mind.

Until you have firmly fixed "I will" in your mind, make up your mind you— won't. "Won't" is the word.

If you are a failure financially or morally, you are probably a failure mentally or physically. The body grows old, but not the mind. Strength of mind can compensate for weakness of body. Strength of b[illegible] make up for weakness of mind.

It is not too [illegible]end. And the mind can be mended.

If you have failed, you have evaded this absolute, imperative truth—the mind can be mended.

Personally, I am inclined to sympathize with the fellow that fails; but in this race of life we cannot wait for cripples. Often we throw a crutch to the lane, but we cannot make hand-chairs and carry the mentally morbid, the indifferent.

Poverty and failure were never intended in the scheme of life.

If you have the power of perservance, the strength of character, the determination to do—if you will work, you will win—you will always find men who want you.

Men with money, with institutions, are waiting for men with personal power, and individuality.

Cash recognizes a real man as the biggest opportunity.

Unused money is nothing but junk, and money can only be used through the medium of real men.

And now for the proof.

You begin now. Begin this very moment to think success. Square your shoulders, and smile, and look success.

When your mind is in the right attitude, when your face is on straight, men worth while will be attracted to you—then opportunity has arrived.—The Silent Partner.

HOW CITIES ARE GOVERNED

In the report entitled "General Statistics of Cities," soon to be issued by the Census Bureau at Washington, mention is made of thef act that New Orleans is at this moment the largest city administered under the commission form of government, but it is noted that in a few days Buffalo will be the largest to inaugurate that system, the population of Buffalo being about 460,000, while in New Orleans has 365,000.

Next in order are Washington, D. C., with nearly 350,000 inhabitants, Portland, Ore., with about 260,000, and Denver, with about 250,000.

In these cities the commissions range in size from three to seven members. Those in St. Paul and Omaha have seven members each; those in San Diego, Cal., and Fort Worth, Tex., six each and that in Huntington, W Va., four.

All the other commissions are composed of either three or five members the majority having five. The salaries paid municipal commissioners range from $500 a year in Jackson, Mich., and Springfield, Ohio, to $7,000 a year in Birmingham, Ala., and their terms of office vary from one to four years.

Dayton, Ohio, has a commission of five members, which decides matters of general policy and a "city manager", appointed by the commission, who looks after the administrative work. The presiding officer of the commission receives $1,800 per annum, the other members $1,200, and the city manager $12,500.

The larger cities mostly retain the older form of government by mayor and council. In all 123 cities of over 30,000, including all having more than 400,000 inhabitants, are governed in this manner. The mayors' salaries range from $100 per annum in Flint, Mich., to $15,000 in New York City, and their terms of office from one to four years. —Buffalo Times.

WHEN COMPETITION BECOMES "UNFAIR"

With the publication of his annual report Secretary Redfield's plan for the prevention of "unfair competition" comes into the open in official robes. By unfair competition Mr. Redfield means that forms of foreign commerce less rhetorically but more definitely termed "dumping," but he makes it more comprehensive than the "shorter and uglier" expression, applying it to all foreign goods that are sold in this market upon such terms as to create, or tend to create, a practical monopoly. He would make this unlawful, and proposes that the foreign representatives of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice be given such additional powers as many be necessary to prevent the shipment of such goods. Moreover, he recommends that t Clayton Anti-Trust Act be so amended as to make it unlawful to buy or sell articles of foreign origin "where the prices to be paid are materially below the current rates for such articles in the country of production, in case such prices substantially lessen competition on the part of American producers."

One of the cardinal tenets of the Democratic Party is the encouragement of foreign competition. That is the primary purpose of the Underwood Tariff Law, to make our merchants "masters of competitive supremacy," as Mr. Wilson so prettily phrases it. It is assumed that by opening our markets to the world we spur our own producers and manufacturers to greater activities and that somehow they are to be benefited by the increased perspiration. But inasmuch as foreign goods can always be produced at less cost than ours, and, without tariff protection, sold at lower prices, how are we to define "unfair competition?"

If, according to administration ideas, underselling is not only fair but highly desirable as a means of encouraging importations and "stimulating world trade," at what point does it become unfair and punishable by law? No doubt the theory is based on the old maxim that one may have too much of a good thing, but where in this case does the good cease to be good and begin to be bad? If a 10 per cent. discount entitles an importer to praise will a 20 per cent. discount send him to jail? These are delicate problems, and we shall await their solution by the administration in anxious suspense.—Auburn Adv.-Journal.

SELLING PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION JOBS

Among the sesnsational flashes of information that have come out since the Thompson legislation committee began investigating the Public Service Commissions none perhaps was more illuminating of corrupt politics than that information volunteered yesterday by Herman A. Metz, the former comptrollerr of New York city and more recently representative in Congress.

Mr. Metz told the newspapers that during the term of Governor Dix some one called him by long distance telephone from Albany and told him that if he would "come through" with $25,000 he could receive an appointment as Public Service Commissioner. He said that he had an idea at that time concerning the identity of the person who then held a position of patronage broker in Albany, but that he "had tried to forget all about it and had succeeded." He also adds that he told the man at the other end of the wire that he could go to a place which, prior t this war was reputed to be the most unpleasant spot known.

Few will doubt that the offer to Mr. Metz was made in good faith by some corrrupt politician who was in a position to persuade Governor Dix to send in the name and later to have the nomination confirmed by the corrupt coalition in the Senate. It is to be regretted, however, that Mr. Metz did not exercise his skill as a lawyer in seeking to trap the Albany grafter and to bring him to punishment. By so doing Mr. Metz would have done a service for the people which might, in some measure, have compensated for some of the honors which the people have placed upon him in thep ast. It was no very creditable part that he played, when he tried hard and succeeded in forgetting the incident, only to mention it after it had outlawed. —Auburn Citizen.

POLITICAL COMMENT BY THE STATE'S EDITORS

The Democratic party in congress decided to raise needed revenue by internal taxation rather than through the tariff. It ignored the menace to American industries to come after peace is concluded in the dumping of cheap foreign goods upon our markets.—Watertown Standard.

The official figures of the enrollment in Monroe county show remarkable gains for the Republicans and corresponding losses for the Democrats. The enrolled Republicans now number 42,942, a gain of 8,258 in a year, against a Democratic enrollment of 10,506 and a loss of 1,929 in a year. The figures here in the city are equally significant. —Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Reports from Washington indicate that the members of the Democratic National Committee met there in no cheerful frame of mind. They are not at all pleased with the political situation. One thing that is causing them much concern is the certainty that next year they will meet no divided opposition, but must contest the Presidency with a united and confident Republican Party. Chairman McCombs himself says that "every sign points to a straightout fight between the Republicans and the Democrats in 1916." And it is this thought that is proving a nightmare to the Democratic managers. — Yonkers Statesman.

Which is the better—the Republican method of paying as you go and of laying up a surplus; or the Democratic method of squandering all along the line and of soaking the people for more taxes—Flushing Times.

The Advertiser has been particularly insistent that all Republicans enroll, as it is only by taking advantage of all thep rivileges afforded under the election laws that the party can do its best work. The great increase in the enrollment this year shows that the Republicans are not only growing stronger in the county, but that the members of the party intend to participate in all its affairs. —Elmira Advertiser.

QUAIL IN POULTRY YARD.

Delaware Farmer Finds Fourteen, Who Make Themselves at Home.

Bridgeville, Del.—Henry Savage, a Nanticoke Hundred farmer, has a covey of quail and has become so attached to them that they will be spared from the hunter's gun, and he intends making a business of raising them for the market.

Recently Savage went out into his poultry yard and was astonished to find fourteen quail feeding with his chickens. At night they went in the poultry house and huddled in a corner, while the chickens took their accustomed roosts.

INDUSTRIAL TOWN FIT TO LIVE IN Midland, Pa., Is a Rival For the German Essen.

FOUNDED BY STEEL COMPANY

Midland Has a Modern Filtration Plant in Connection With Its Water Supply System, Miles of Paved Streets and Comfortable Homes For Workingmen.

Essen, Germany, home of the Krupp guns, has often been held up as the height of practical idealism in the construction of industrial towns. It has been regarded as the acme of all that is artistic and beautiful for a town whose population is made up of workmen in a manufacturing plant. The United States, on the other hand, has never been noted for the beauty and cleanliness of its industrial towns, and Pennsylvania has frequently been criticised for negligence of housing conditions among the laboring classes, says J. E. Wright in the American City.

As one of the exceptions, however, to this rule of poor conditions in industrial towns and in some respects as a rival for the German Essen, Midland stands out prominently. This town was founded in 1906 by the Midland Steel company and is located on the Ohio river thirty-seven miles southwest of Pittsburgh. The original plant was taken over in 1911 by the Pittsburgh Crucible Steel company, a subsidiary of the Crucible Steel Company of America, and the unsold portion of the town, which included about 600 acres, was later acquired by the Midland Improvement company, also a subsidiary of the Crucible Steel company.

When the town came into the hands of this new concern a decided and rapid change began to take place. Improvements were at once instituted, and municipal conditions immediately underwent a change. The usual checkerboard fashion in which the old town had been laid out was done away with. In its place was substituted a system of curved and winding streets and a number of small parks, which gave to the little town a new appearance of beauty and grace.

Ever since then the company has done much to improve conditions and to give to the inhabitants a town of which they might well be proud. Midland is one of the few industrial towns of its size that have filtration plants in connection with their water supply systems. No charge has been made to the borough up to this time for water furnished the fire hydrants and the other water consumed by the borough, including that used in the schools. The water to the people is furnished at a low rate. An elaborate system of sanitary and storm sewers has been installed, which insures proper drainage and improved hygienic conditions.

When the Crucible Steel company came into possession of the town in 1911 it found but one paved street. Now the town has miles of paved streets, which are broad and well kept.

One of the chief factors in the appearance of the town is the style and appearance of the houses built there. There are several types in Midland, the most interesting of which are those in the unique group which has been designated "Toyland." These houses have been designed after those in Essen, Germany. This group comprises several hundred houses constructed during the last year. They are of single, double and triple type and are modern and up to date in all their features. They are built of hollow tile, plastered cement and a "pebble dash" or stucco coat.

The rents vary from $21 to $27 per month. Each house has five or six rooms, bath, pantry, electric lights, gas, inside closet, running water and warm air furnaces.

Another type of house in Midland, interesting chiefly because of its peculiar method of construction, is the group of so called "poured concrete" houses. In the building of the houses an experiment was made with Mr. Edison's new invention. The concrete is poured into frames, and practically no wood is used in the entire construction. This invention of Mr. Edison's, while still in an experimental stage as regards practical use, has met with success in Midland and is attracting numerous visitors from all parts of the industrial district. These first buildings, while not beautiful, are clean cut, solid structures, which are in perfect harmony with the rest of artistic Midland. The houses rent for $14 per month.

Taken as a whole, Midland is demonstrating the fact that a large corporation, by doing its best toward its employees, can promote happiness, good living conditions and decent municipal administration and can at the same time raise its employees to a higher level of efficiency and thus gain its own end of cheapening the cost of production.

All dead but me Ezra Kind, killed by Ind beyond high hill, got our gold June, 1834. Got all of the gold we could carry on our pony, all got by the Indians. SQUIRRELS' DEATHS PUZZLING

Folks About Blue Ridge Mountains Think Chestnut Blight Is Cause.

Waynesboro, Pa.—The squirrels are said to be dying off in droves in the Blue Ridge mountains to the east of Waynesboro and on down through the Catoctin range in Frederick county.

Bunches of dead foxes and gray squirrels are being found on the ground by woodchoppers, chestnut hunters and others.

The condition is so exceptional that the folks about the mountain are unable to account for it except on the theory that the animals have been poisoned by the chestnut blight that has been raging in the Blue Ridge chain for the past year, destroying thousands of trees.

MEXICO PLANS TO EXTEND RAILWAYS

Carranza Government Considering Construction of Lines.

GIVING OF WORK ONE IDEA

Inspector of Mexican Consulates Declares Helping of Laborers One of Main Purposes—Some Roads Started Before Trouble Began—One Will Parallel Rio Grande.

San Antonio, Tex.—It is stated by Rafael E. Musquiz, inspector of Mexican consulates, who has arrived here direct from the City of Mexico, that the de facto government of his country has under consideration plans for the early construction of several thousand miles of railway. One of the main purposes of the proposed work is to give employment to great numbers of laborers who are in need of help of this sort. At the same time the importance of opening for development wide stretches of country that are now lacking in transportation facilities is not lost sight of.

According to Mr. Musquiz, northern Mexico is to be especially favored in the matter of obtaining new lines of railway. One of the most important of these projects has for its route the isolated stretch of border territory between Nuevo Laredo and Piedras Negras, paralleling the Rio Grande. This proposed "picket line" road will be extended later from Nuevo Laredo to a connection with the Matamoros-Monterey division of the National Railways of Mexico, thus forming an all rail route between Matamoros and Piedras Negras, opposite Eagle Pass, Tex., about 500 miles.

The plans also provide for the construction of a railroad from Monclova, Coahuila, to the city of Chihuahua, a distance of about 450 miles, traversing a region rich in coal deposits and precious minerals; there are also many large ranches along the route. The construction of this road was projected by a syndicate of American capitalists at the time the Madero revolution was started, a concession for the enterprise having been granted by the Diaz administration.

The branch line of the National Railways that runs from Monclova to Cuatro Cienegas, General Carranza's home town, in the state of Coahuila, is to be extended to the mining town and district of Sierra Mojada, a distance of about seventy miles, Mr. Musquiz says. At Sierra Mojada the new line will connect with the Mexican Northern railroad, which runs to Escalon, where it connects with the Chihuahua division of the National Railways.

The construction of a branch line of the Torreon-Piedras Negras division of the National railways from Allende to Las Vacas, opposite Del Rio, Tex., about seventy-five miles, is already in progress, according to Mr. Musquiz.

The construction of the Tampico-Mexico City "cut off" line is to be resumed very soon. This project, in connection with the proposed railway that is to be built between Tampico and Matamoros, opposite Brownsville, 315 miles, is perhaps one of the most important of all the railway enterprises which the de facto government now has under consideration. Its fulfillment will mean the establishment of a new and direct rail route between the United States and the Mexican capital, reducing the distance about 200 miles, as compared with the shortest of the existing lines. The "cut off" road was under construction when the revolutionary troubles began, considerable grading having been done on the Tampico end.

Another important railroad project that was abandoned on account of the internal strife is to be revived. It is that of a connecting line from a point on the National Tehuantepec railroad and Campeche, where connection will be made with the United Railways of Yucatan. This road will be about 400 miles long.

CRADLE SONGS OF MANY NATIONS

Long Program of Short Selections to Be Given by Baptist Sunday School—Rare Treat Promised.

The musical entertainment to be given by the pupils of the Baptist Sunday school, tomorrow evening, in the church parlors, will not be of such duration as not to tire any member of the audience.

While the pragrom includes many numbers, many of them are very short and therefore very sweet.

The nature of the program admits of elaborate costuming and music of a serious and humorous nature, as into the network of it are interwoven the "cradle songs of many nations," which in fact, give the program its designation.

At the time of rebuilding the Baptist church here many pledges were given for funds. The children of the Sunday school did not ask for exemption, but plunged right into the fray. They want to make good on their pledge, hence the entertainment to-which is as follows:

FARMERS' WEEK COMES IN FEB.

Cornell Invites Farmers of State and Their Families to Attend Big Week in Ithaca.

Farmers' Week at Cornell comes this year from February 7 to 12, according to an announcement just made by the state college of agriculture, which has provided for 5,000 visitors.

The college invites thef armers of the state with their families, and the railroads will give reduced round-trip rates. Aside from the cost of travelling, the college authosities estimate that a farmer, his wife, and four children can attend at an expense not to exceed $30 for all six to cover a week's stay in Ithaca.

During this week the college endeavors to condense into practical form all of the information which it has on better farming and the management of the farm home.

There will be lectures, exhibits, and practical demonstrations on various farm subjects such as potato-growing, poultry raising, dairying, forestry, home-making, farm management, insect control, vegetable gardening, and flower growing. Rural schools, churches, and community organizations will also come in for a large share of attention. At the same time there will be held a number of conventions or conferences of societies which deal with agriculture and allied interests. Among others, there will be meetings of the state drainage convention, floral club federations, the state poultry association, rural engineering society, homemakers' conference, vegetable growers association, and the coutry church conference.

In addition to the educational features of the week there will be a large number of social gatherings and entertainments. Three speaking contests for the agricultural students will be held during the week: there will be a number of illustrated lectures, concerts, and an organ recital on the pipe organ in the auditorium, The main purpose of the farmers' week conferences, however, is announced to be that of exchanging first-hand personal knowledge and experience.

MOST PUNCTUAL MAN IN AMERICA, MR. WILSON

In the January American Magazine James Hay, Jr., says in his article on the working habits of President Wilson:

"Recently I asked one of Mr. Wilson's secretaries for his opinion as to the most important characteristic—that is, routine and partly mechanical characteristic—in the President's daily work.

" 'Punctuality.' he replied. 'There never has been in the White House, and I believe there never has been in Washington, a man who was so marvelously, I might say incredibly, punctual day in and day out.

" 'He is not only punctual himself, but he requires punctuality from others. If a man is ever late once for an appointment with the President, neither he nor the President ever forgets it.

" 'I remember one occasion when he was governor of New Jersey, and a special delegation from the legislature was two minutes late in keeping its appointment with him.

" ' "Gentlemen," ' said the then governor, taking his watch from his pocket, ' "I am sorry to see that you are late."

" ' "It is true that we are, and we wish to apologize," ' replied the chairman of the delegation.

" ' "I accept your apology, but I hope it will not occur again," ' replied the governor."

FAILURE OF THE WILSON POLICIES

Thomas O. Marvin Says People Are Awake to Conditions and Have Turned Tables.

At the anual meeting of the Home Market Club, Thomas O. Marvin, secretaary, discussed the failure of President Wilson's policies.

"At no previous period in our history," said he, "have the policies of a national administration broken down so completely when put into operation as during the past two years of the present administration. No government of this or of any other country has turned about-face on so many issues of national importance."

That the American people appreciate the complete failure of the national administration, Mr. Marvin said was indicated by the results of recent elections. Said he:

"A majority of 146 in the House of Representatives when the Wilson Administration took office has been cut down to a narrow margin of 25. A great state in the heart of the solid South remains in the Democratic column by only a few hundred votes. Maryland was saved only by the vote of Baltimore, the balance of the State casting a Republican majority. In the Old Dominion, the native State of President Wilson, there were Republican gains in many counties. In New Jersey, the President's State, only seven of the twenty-one counties were Democratic. In New York, the Congressional elections were swept by protectionists, a particularly significant victory being won by William S. Bennett in the 23rd district where the Democrats have a usual majority of from 6,000 to 8,000. In this district the Democratic candidate used repeatedly a eulogistic letter of endorsement from the President, but the Republican candidate who fought on a protectionist platform won a decisive victory. Massachusetts broke away from five years of Democratic control and, under the leadership of Samuel W. McCall, a Republican of National reputation, becomes once more a dependable Republican state.

"It is a hopeless task for the Democrats to extract comfore from the elections of 1914 and 1915. The trend of American thought is against them. The logic of events has refuted their theories. Their little experiment has been tried and thec ountry wants no more of it. The times are out of joint for Utopian theories and the illusions of free trade.

'The country is in no temper to endure any policies that force business in to bankruptcy and drive our ships from the trade routes of the world. It demands now a sturdy Americanism thatw ill safeguard our industries on land and our flag on every sea.

"That demand will grow with irrestible force and give us in 1916 an administration devoted to America first, last and al lthe time."

NO SIGN OF MID-WINTER DULLNESS

Dun's Review bears the following optimistic outlook:

Apart from the rush in the shopping districts, there has been little in the business world to indicate that this is he holiday season. Preparations for inventorying are much less of a factor, than usual and, instead of the slowing down process characteristic of the period in most branches, commercial activities are exceptionally well-sustained. Even aside from the steel industry, overtime continues in force at many manufacturing plants and the general request for early deliveries testifies to the urgency of current requirements., Evidences accumulate that supplies are becoming short in some lines and efforts to replenish depleted stocks are hampered by the railroad congestion, though the additional embargoes on export freight work to the advantage of domestic consumers. There is, however, still considerable complaint of retarded traffic movements and delayed shipments accelerate the advance in commodity prices, fuel being notably strong on this account. A sharp rise has also occurred in copper—which is at the highest level since 1907—but this is due to a resumption of heavy buying rather than to any scarcity of the metal. Production is at a record rate and industrial operations generally are unabated, conditions at the footwear factories being without precedent in this regard. Manufacturers are taxed to the utmost and are booked months ahead, while only the shortage of dyestuffs curtails activities at the textile mills. Under the circumstances, there is a keen demand for skilled labor and the marked increase in the working force, in many instances at enhanced wages, is reflected in the largest volume of Christmas sales ever reported in some sections. This business, in conjunction with the expanion in other lines, has tended to swell the aggregate of bank clearings, which for the week is 65.5 per cent. above last year's and 74.6 per cent. in excess of 1913. and all the statistical gauges are pointing strongly upward. Transporting interests still add materially to previous gains in r evenues and some systems have already prospered sufficiently to warrant the declaration of larger dividend disbursements, many industrial corporations taking similar action from time to time. Investors, therefore, are alsso profiting by the present boom, while it is of further significance that, with deposits mounting, savings banks are paying a higher interest return. In spite of numerous complaints of inadequate oversea shipping facilities, merchandise exports during November were the largest for any month in the history of the country, the outgo surpassing $331,000,000 against the previous maximum of $322,000,000, established in October.

Our Washington Letter

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington—Secretary McAdoo makes no reference in his annual report to the probability that the United States Supreme Court will uphold the decision of the Court of Customs Appeals, which decided last spring that the clause providing for a five per cent rebate on goods brought in in American vessels was equally applicable, under our commerce and navigation treaties, to merchandise brought in in vessels of foreign countries with whom we have such treaties in force. If sustained, this will take many millions from the treasury.

This rebate clause was a fatuous attempt on the part of Mr. Underwood and his disciples to stimulate the upbuilding of our shipping industry by what really amounted to an indirect subsidy, inasmuch as five per cent of the import duties collected in the name of the U. S. Treasury were to be refunded on those goods which were entered in American vessels. The Republicans repeatedly called the attention of the Democrats to the fact that this clause would work to the benefit of about 20 countries who were our foreign competitors, if it became a part of the law, and that it really meant a horizontal cut of five per cent of the entire dutiable list, under the treaty rights of those countries. But the majority remained obdurate. The decision of the Customs Court was in consonance with Republican argument.

At the time the Customs Court decision was rendered the amount of rebates due foreign vessels was estimated to be between eighteen and twenty millions of dollars. The Government appealed the case to the Supreme Court, and press notices recently stated that it would come up for a hearing February 21, 1916. There is scarcely any question but that the Supreme Court will affirm the decision of the Customs Court. Meanwhile, the sum for which the government will ultimately be accountable, and which must be taken from the Treasury cash register, with a "no sale" ring-up, is being steadily augmented as each arrival of a foreign vessel bringing imports from abroad calls for additional rebating.

In all probability Mr. McAdoo, following a decision of the Supreme Court adverse to the Government's interests, will resort to one of his old tricks and defer liquidation of rebate claims until June 30, 1916, in order that the treasury deficit for that fiscal year will be somewhat less shocking to the public and dangerous to the Democratic chances of success in the 1916 campaign. Watch him! The delay in getting this case before the Supreme Court carried him over the fiscal year 1915.

The anticipated decision of the Supreme Court means one of two things, either of which will be distasteful to those who voted for the clause: Its immediate repeal, which will be a confession of legislative inefficiency, or its continuance in force, which will mean a continuing decrease in the revenues.

With a postal deficit of eleven millions of dollars staring the officials of thep ost office department in the face, the modest Daniel C. Roper, first assistance postmaster general, puts in a provision for a salary increase of $2,200 per annum, in the departmental estimate of appropriations for the coming fiscal year. Inasmuch as Mr. Roper now gets $5,000 a year, this increase will make his place at the public trough worth $7,200 annually, or $300 less than the salary paid a United States Senator. Increases are also asked for the three other assistants. This is as elf-awarded premium on official mismanagement.

JEWS DECIDE TO CELEBRATE IMPORTANT EVENT

At a meeting of the congregation of the Artifedas Israel synagogue, the new house of worship recently organized by the Jewish residents of this city, it was decided to hold the commemoration exercises in honor of the opening of the synagogue on January 30th.

It is planned to hold a package party and dance in connection with the exercises, also to furnish a musical and oratorical program. Refreshments will also be served.

The Rev. Brody and Rev. Coblenz, two orthodox rabbis of Syracuse, will be invited to preside at the exercises.

It is anticipated that a large number of visitors will attend the affair and invitations will be sent to Oswego and Syracuse friends to help swell the attendance.

Messrs. I. Horwitz, Joseph Waldhorn and Henry Mursky have been appointed as a committee to arrange all details of the services and entertainment.

PAGE—CHETNEY

Two popular young people of Fulton were joined in marriage this morning at 9:30 at the parochial residence of the Immaculate Conception church. The bride was Miss Lela Chetney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Chetney and the groom, Arthur C. Page.

There were only two witnesses present, Mrs. Leon Chetney, who attended the bride, and Erford Page, of Syracuse, a brother of the groom, who acted as best man. Rev. J. L. Lindsman performed the ceremony.

After the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Page left on the 10:10 train, south, for a brief honeymoon trip. At the station were a number of friends of the groom, members of the Nondescript bowling team, of which Mr. Page is a member.

The newlyweds were handcuffed together by the groom's friends and when the train left the station, they were given a rousing send off but no attempt was made to release the two from the steel bracelets.

After the wedding tour, they will reside in this city. Mr. Page holds a responsible position at the E-Z Opener Bag Company.

The Papers That Have the Punch

A Meeting

By SARAH BAXTER

One evening at a social gathering in New York city a girl sat alone, and those who passed her would have wondered how one so attractive looking could be a wallflower were they not cognizant of the fact that the higher the social status the greater the selfishness. To speak more plainly, the young lady, a Miss Starkweather, was a western girl visiting an aunt, and her way into society had not been paved for her by certain requisites without which an unknown girl could not hope for any attention.

The hostess observed Miss Starkweather sitting by herself and thought of a plan. She had no especial sympathy with the girl, but a lady to whom she was under obligations socially had asked for an invitation for a man with whom her husband had had dealings in Colorado, who had come to New York and said her husband considered it to his interest to treat him with especial attention. The hostess found the above named guest, Peter Gallagher, holding his hands with a bored look on his face and took him to Miss Starkweather and introduced him.

When the young lady heard the name and looked up into the man's eyes it was evident that there was a commotion in her bosom.

"Gallagher, did you say?" she asked.

"Yes'm; I'm Peter Gallagher of Colorado."

"Did you ever live in Arizona?"

"I certainly did."

The man seated himself beside the girl, who was a dozen years his junior, and the two fell into an animated conversation. Mr. Gallagher was desirous of learning what the young lady knew about him, and by way of reply she told him a story.

"Once upon a time," she said, "a man, his wife and several children, the oldest of whom was a girl of twelve, lived in a cabin on a prairie. There were no forests to obstruct the view and few houses. One morning the oldest girl, Alice, went out of the cabin for water with which to make coffee for breakfast and against the rising sun saw a horseman coming at a gallop. She watched him till he came near, then went into the cabin and told her father.

"The settler met the horseman at the door, and the latter said:

"'There's been a murder over at Hilton, and your revolver with your initials carved on the handle has been found near by. I don't believe it's yours, is it?'

"'No.'

"'Some one used it to put the job on to you. The committee found it and are coming for you. Get on your horse—quick!'

"The settler got out his fastest horse, and the two galloped away. They had scarcely gone when Alice saw coming, not a man, but a dozen. As soon as they reached her father's cabin they scattered themselves around it, and one of them, the sheriff, called on the settler to come out and surrender himself. The wife and mother went to the door and in a trembling voice assured him that her husband was not there. Throwing himself off his horse, the sheriff went into the house and searched every nook and corner. Not finding whom he wanted, he rode away with his men, who meanwhile had noticed fresh tracks of horses' hoofs in the same direction as the settler and the man who had warned him, leaving the woman and her children in an agony of fear, for there had been many brutal murders in that region, and the vigilance committee were endeavoring to stamp them out without wasting time in trying those accused.

"The committee overtook the settler and the man who had warned him, and the latter stopped and faced them. He told them he was convinced that the man they were after was innocent of crime. The sheriff said he was convinced to the contrary. Then the other said he would not see an innocent man strung up without an effort to save him and they would have to fight the two together.

"This turned the scale, and the settler surrendered on condition that he be fairly tried. He was acquitted and returned to his family. He told his wife and children how he had been saved from being hanged and charged them all to reverence forever the man who had so nobly stood by him."

The girl paused, her last words being spoken in a tremulous voice.

"I think I remember somepin like that," said Mr. Gallagher. "You refer to John Starkweather. He'd done me a favor once, and, seeing that he was shore to be strung up for somepin he hadn't done I lit out to warn him. Was you one of the children who was in the cabin that mornin'?"

"I was the oldest girl, Alice."

"Well, now, it's queer, isn't it, that I should meet you among these God forsaken people? Don't you want to go back to a respectable community?"

"I think I do."

"Who is that man?" asked a guest, referring to Mr. Gallagher. "He doesn't look as if he belonged here."

"He doesn't," was the reply. "He's one of the biggest gold mine owners in Colorado."

Persons overhearing this sought an introduction to the stranger, but he was on the point of leaving.

Not long after this Gallagher returned to what he called a respectable community, and Alice Starkweather went with him as his wife.

FOUR LEGGED GIRL DEAD.

Little Virginia McDonald of Virginia Had Four Arms Also.

Harrisonburg, Va.—Virginia McDonald, a little girl with four legs and four arms, who for four years has been exhibited at fairs and other public places all over the eastern part of the United States, died recently at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon McDonald, near Lebanon church, Shenandoah county. The child was five years one month and nineteen days old. She was sick just two days with tonsilitis and membranous croup.

When several months old she was taken to Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, where physicians and medical scientists examined her. They decided that it would be impossible to operate on the child without causing death. There have been other persons born with four legs and four arms, but they did not live as long as the little Shenandoah girl. They died either at birth or soon thereafter, according to reports.

She leaves her parents and three little brothers, and also a large sum of money. Her father is a farmer.

CONFUSED BY FINAL "E."

Notified Her Brother Joined Marine Corps, She Thought He Was Dead.

Portland, Ore.—Never having used the final "e" in her own spelling of the word "corpse," Mrs. Marceline Germain of Donaldson, Mich., was prostrated with grief upon receipt of an official communication announcing the fact that her brother, Joseph Eli Jollicouer, had joined the United States marine corps and had named her as next of kin to be notified in case of death.

"If my brother is a corps of what did [illegible]?" she wrote to Captain H. T. [illegible], in charge of the local recruiting station of the United States marine corps, who had enlisted the man and was responsible for the notification.

The recruiting officer by return mail made the sorrowing sister cease mourning and assured her that the "corps" to which her brother had lately attached himself was the "livest" kind of an organization.

The Professor's Experiment

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Professor Brixton Longbody was a born philosopher and a logician. At fifteen years old he had read more philosophy than forty average men combined.

At the age of twenty-five young Longbody was appointed professor of logic and philosophy at a state university.

One afternoon the professor was crossing the campus when he picked up a book that some one had dropped or thrown away. It was entitled "The Life of Vidocq." Never in all his days had he read a criminal or a detective story. He had never let his profound mind dwell for three seconds on such literature. Behold, the time had come! That night he sat up until past midnight reading that book. It was a new revelation to him, a new world of thought.

He analyzed Vidocq's logic and philosophy and found fault with them.

He counted up the number of blunders that the average criminal made in a case and was amazed that the fellow had not been overhauled in half a day. After reading the book twice over he laid it aside with a sigh of:

"Dear me, what a pack of idiots! And how easy to have been sensible! As a detective I would have made a great success. As a criminal I fear that I should have been more successful."

Do what he would, Professor Longbody could not drive away these thoughts. In a couple of weeks, as he walked out, he imagined himself either a criminal or a detective. Sometimes he was ashamed and indignant at himself, and at other times he was rather pleased. In passing down a certain street the professor noticed that a parlor window in a certain house was half raised. A night or two later he passed the same house an hour before midnight and noticed that the same window was still up.

"Careless people—very careless," he whispered to himself. "That's a plain invitation for a robber to enter and plunder the house."

It made him angry with the owner of the place. Was it his duty to teach the man a lesson? Would you believe that the great philosopher argued that it was?

The professor would enter that house by night. By the open window? No, sir; he was too sharp for that. That would be the road of the common criminal, and it would be a fearful blunder. The owner of the house was inviting a would be robber to climb in that window to get caught in a bear trap or lose his life by a spring gun.

The professor bought a dark lantern. He put a few tools in his pockets and set out one night to commit a philosophical and logical burglary. He was expected at the front. Therefore he appeared at the back and attacked what he judged was the pantry window.

Professor Longbody went into that window like a monkey. He was not mistaken about its being the pantry. The door leading into the dining room was shut, and it was time for that dark lantern. It was flashed—that is, there was no flash. A dark lantern had been bought all right, but the professor had not bought any oil to fill it. He must hunt for matches in a strange house at midnight. He had forgotten to post himself as to whether the house was lighted by electricity, gas or lamps, but he softly opened the door and found himself in a room almost as dark. Where was the match safe, if there was one? In the kitchen probably. He went feeling his way for about ten feet. Then he bumped up against a table and involuntarily put out his hands, and they struck a pile of dishes and tumbled them to the floor.

The professor crouched on the floor and waited with beating heart, and he had only a few seconds to wait. The room was suddenly flooded with an electric light, and a man came running downstairs, revolver in hand. No move was made to get away. On the contrary, the teacher of philosophy and logic got to his feet and sat down on a chair.

"Well?" queried the man with the gun as he sat down on another.

"Is it of any use to say anything?" replied Professor Longbody.

"Oh, yes," replied the householder. "You see, I know you. You teach philosophy and logic at the school, but you don't practice what you teach."

"I was making an experiment," was the rather weak reply.

"Yes; I have expected you since you first saw that open window. I happened to be watching you that day. You had convinced yourself that you were smarter than the smartest criminal."

"Y-e-s."

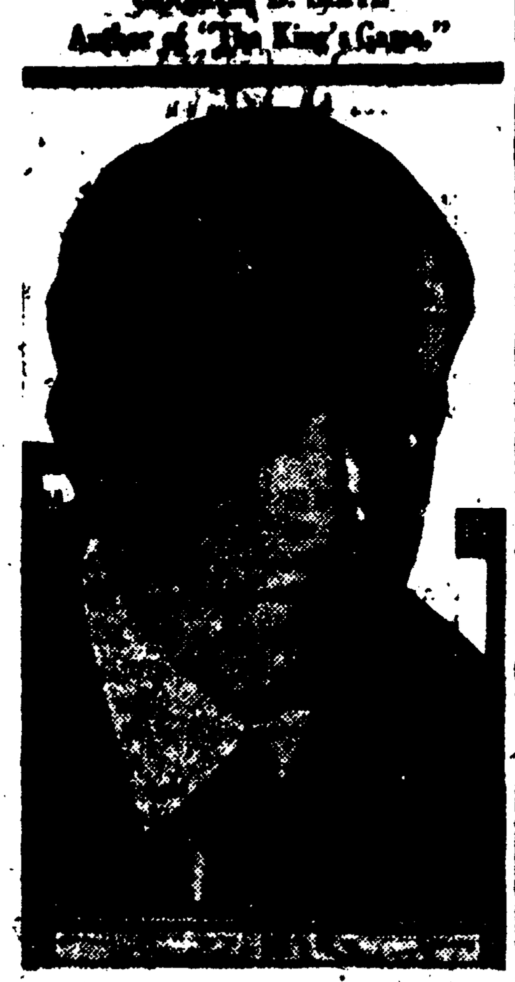
"What are you going to do with me?" asked the professor.

"Why, nothing, professor, nothing at all. You are free to go. You have made your little experiment, and it has been a stupendous blunder and a dire failure."

"I thank you, sir, for understanding it that way," replied the erudite man.

"Oh, no thanks, my dear man. Before you go, however, let me tell you that a robber came around here while you were at work in the back and effected an entrance to the house next door, which is taking care of itself while the family are away. I presume his plunder will be valued at $500 at least. Good night, Professor Longbody. Keep it up and stick to your textbooks."

GEORGE B. SEITZ
Author of "The King's Game."



THE STORY OF A SCENARIO EDITOR.

A young-looking young man leaned on the counter in a pawnshop while the pawnbroker appraisingly looked over the garments. He held up the trousers. In the rear showed two large and much sat-on patches. "I'll give you seventy-five cents on the suit," said the pawn-broker. George Brackett Seitz took it and hurried home to his apartments in romantic and literary Washington Square, where he lived with three or four other artistic gentlemen who ate once in a while. On the seventy-five cents he gave a sumptuous dinner.

That was five years ago. Now Seitz is cleaning up between thirty and fifty thousand dollars a year as Scenario Director at the Pathe Exchange. He is twenty-seven years old, has one wife and one child and lives with both of them. All ye aspiring photoplaywrights, go thou and do likewise.

The experience which equipped him for this responsible position was varied and sometimes painful. However, he kept at it. His stories grew better and better and sold with more frequency—and Madame Prosperity took him as her own.

Some of his original stories are now appearing on the Gold Rooster Five-Reel Program. They include "The Spender" and "The Nihilist." Mr. Seitz also adapted "Nedra," "The Closing Net," "The Beloved Vagabond," "The Galloper," and is now engaged on Kipling's "The Light That Failed." He is also responsible for "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford," now abroad in the land. No wonder he makes so much money.

Mr. Seitz has an intimate knowledge of the theatre from his experience as an actor.

He has written numerous vaudeville acts and stage plays, among which was "The King's Game," in which James K. Hackett starred.

Previous to his stage and literary career, Seitz studied painting three years and one year as illustrator.

It is pretty hard to understand how he accomplished all these things and still be only twenty-seven years old. But it is all down in black and white in the family Bible, so it must be so.

The Pathe style of scenario is one of the most severe and exacting in the business. It is Pathe principle and custom to write scenarios that give full and technical instructions to Director and Camera-man. When a scenario is handed to a Director, the understanding is that he is to put it on as per scenario. To do this is his contract. He is not permitted to change it. This necessarily implies that scenarios must be carefully done.

Action, suspense, continuity, logic and heart interest are the big ingredients in Seitz's pot. Out of these he stews stories that are stories—photoplays that first and last are entertaining.

Motion Picture Company To Live in Lumber Camp.

Few scenario writers seem to realize the importance of making their scripts conform to the season in which they are to be put into pictures. Every scenario editor can tell stories of receiving in the merry springtime scripts which require the dead of winter to produce, with all the accompanying snowdrifts and icicles. It is equally irritating to receive, when good picture material is scarce, in the coldest days of winter, a scenario which demands the roses and foliage of June.

Here is Donald Mackenzie, for instance, who produces Gold Rooster pictures for Pathe, awaiting eagerly reports of heavy snowfalls in Maine. He is going to put into motion pictures Fred Jackson's novel, "The Precious Packet," and the scenario has many scenes which are laid in a big woods lumber camp with the ground covered with snow. His players, headed by Lois Meredith and Ralph Kellard, are afraid to be out of easy communication with him for even a few hours, for, like firemen, they await the call, only in this instance it will be the news that it is snowing in Maine. It will be a new experience for the charming Miss Meredith to eat baked beans and brown bread in a lumber camp as the guest of husky lumberjacks, and, incidentally, a new one for the lumberjacks to entertain [illegible].

BEGGAR GETS $2,000,000.

Blind Man of Webb City, Mo., Then Wishes His Sight Restored.

Webb City, Mo.—To buy back his eyesight, to own a humble home, which he now rents and to start a bank in Webb City are the three first ambitions of the Rev. Z. R. Cotton, a blind street beggar here, who was told that he had inherited more than $2,000,000, of which $650,000 is cash, through the recent death of his only brother, Powell Cotton, at Richmond, Ark.

After being told of the fortune the blind man continued throughout the day soliciting alms at the postoffice door, but will leave shortly for Richmond and will stop at Tulsa, Okla., to consult a doctor who has assured him that for a stated sum, formerly fabulous to Cotton, his eyesight can be restored perfectly. Cotton has been blind since a sickness twenty-two years ago. He is sixty-three years old.

MEXICO FACES DAMAGE CLAIMS

Many Millions Will Be Asked by Railroads and Miners.

SMALL INDIVIDUALS ARE HIT

No Record of Losses Inflicted During Revolution on Owners of Private Factories—Railroads Have the Largest Bills—Carranza Government to Be Called on to Pay.

Some of the American interests in Mexico which suffered heavy losses as a result of the revolutions are wondering what course will be pursued in arriving at a settlement of their claims. In a great number of instances it was impossible for the losers to prepare and file an inventory of their losses with the United States consul of their respective district, a requirement which, it is said, the government of General Carranza will demand as a preliminary basis for recognizing claims.

It was recently stated that the Southern Pacific railroad of Mexico alone will present a claim for reimbursement of losses and damages to its property amounting to $12,000,000 gold. It is expected that the minority stockholders of the National Railways of Mexico, most of whom are Americans, will demand full payment for their pro rata of losses to that system and that it will not be less than $15,000,000 gold. The British owners of the Mexico Northwestern railroad, which was out of commission for many months at a stretch on account of revolutionary disturbances and destruction of track, will submit a bill for damages aggregating several millions, it is stated.

Miners Suffered Heavily.

The El Paso Milling company, which is extensively interested in the timber and lumber business in the state of Chihuahua, recently filed a statement showing that its losses since the Madero revolution have totaled $863,000.

While the investments of the American Smelting and Refining company in Mexico aggregate several millions, it is understood that its bill for damages will be comparatively small. Despite the disturbance, the company was able to operate its smelting plants and mines a good part of the time.

Many individual Americans and American companies that own mines, ranches, farms, manufacturing plants, mercantile establishments and a variety of other property in Mexico were made the victims of bands of looters and vandals, and these losses, which aggregate millions, are charged up to the government. The American oil interests in the Tampico territory were losers to the amount of many millions on account of the revolutions. These claims are said to be shipshape, a careful account having been kept of all losses by men who have remained on the ground for that purpose.

It is the small American loser in Mexico who probably will have the most difficulty in getting his claim acted upon. There are scores of farmers and other small property owners who were robbed of practically all their movable effects, including cattle, horses, crops, etc. The nearest American consul was perhaps two or three hundred miles away, too far for filing an itemized account with him. How these small claims will be treated remains to be seen. That a great number of them will be presented for payment is certain.

Thunder at Sea.

The Astronomical Society of France has again taken up the discussion which has been before it on several previous occasions, and that is the statement that thunder is never heard at sea. The statement was originally attributed to Baron von Humboldt, and it has been frequently questioned, but those who insist that they have heard thunder at sea have also stated that the peals were not so loud as on land. A large number of seamen have been found to agree with the scientist, although it is suggested that the other noises prevailing on shipboard during a storm may be the reason why the thunder often passes unnoticed.

Where the Worry Comes.

"Are you not worried by your wife's absence?" "No. It's her return that always worries me."

Two Delectable Skating Suits

Designed and Copyrighted by Franklin Simon & Co., New York.

THESE young ladies have jolly skating suits designed, one of rose corduroy and the other a gray and black plaid shawl. The corduroy suit is cut with a middy blouse over a plaited skirt, and with it is worn a white corduroy tam and a white fox fur set. Just the right dash of color is lent the sober plaid suit by a wide scarf of black and orange stripe, while the pomponed cap itself is of burnt orange velvet. High white buck boots, the shawl fringe and the debonair scarf make this just the jauntiest kind of a sport costume.

There are some very smart serge frocks, with plaid plaited skirts and bodices of plain color piped with plaid.

• • •

Buckles of all sorts are used as trimming. On some of the severe shapes in beaver hats a wide buckle of jet, celluloid or bone is used with a band of corded ribbon as the sole trimming.

Design For Lace or Embroidery.

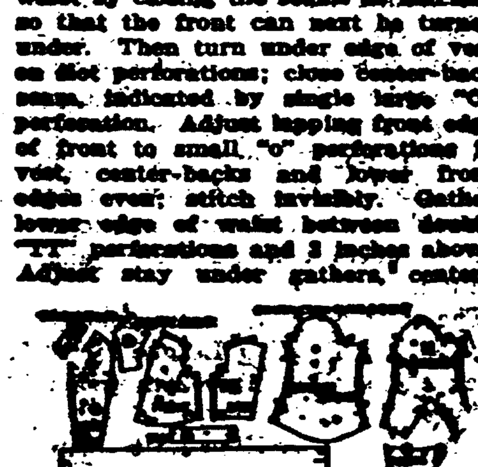
For the embroidered and bordered materials that are so fashionable this design is especially suited, being graceful and simple to make.

Materials enriched by lace edges and borders are so smart this season that they are a constant source of pleasure to the well dressed. This costume for a young girl is made of embroidered voile, 3 yards 30 inches wide being required for the lower skirt section, 1¼ yard 15 inches wide for the front of the waist and 4⅝ yards plain material 36 inches wide for upper part of skirt, sleeves, vest and back of waist. The sleeves may be made of net or allover lace, however, in which event 1⅞ yards 36 inch material will be needed.

As always, we begin making the waist by closing the seams as notched, so that the front can next be turned under. Then turn under edge of vest on slot perforations; close center-back seam, indicated by single large "O" perforation. Adjust lapping front edge of front to small "o" perforations in vest, center-backs and lower front edges even; stitch invisibly. Gather lower edge of waist between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above. Adjust stay under gathers, center-backs even, small "o" perforation at under-arm seam and bring front edge to center-front.



Now, close the sleeve seam as notched; gather on small "o" perforations, draw gathers to required size and stitch tape underneath. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Sew in armhole as notched; small "o" perforation at shoulder seam.

When closing the back seam of skirt, which is done first when coming to the skirt, leave upper section free above large "O" perforation for a placket. Turn under lower edge of upper section on slot perforations and baste; gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Adjust lower section underneath the folded edge of upper section, center-fronts, seams and edges underneath even; stitch 3 inches from the folded edge forming tuck effect. Turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations. Adjust skirt, stitching upper edge over upper row of gathers in waist (on right side), center-fronts and center-backs even, small "o" perforations at under-arm seams; stitch tape under gathers in skirt from center-front to center-back (on left side) and finish for a closing.

Trim the sleeves with tiny bands of ribbon, finished in bows.

HURLS ALIMONY ON PORCH.

Akron (O.) Man Gets Lessons in Proper Way to Pay.

Akron, O.—Probation Officer Switzer recently gave Harry P. Hood instructions as to the proper way to pay $5 a week alimony he was ordered to give his wife.

Hood tied up $4.50 in a small package and threw it upon the porch of his wife's home. Mrs. Hood asked Switzer to make Hood give up the additional 50 cents and added that it would be more satisfactory if in future the money was paid through the court.

The Kitchen Cupboard

INTERESTING DESSERTS.

BROWN BETTY.—Put a layer of sweetened apple sauce or chopped apples, sugared, in a buttered dish; add a few lumps of butter, then a layer of bread or cracker crumbs, sprinkled with a little cinnamon, then a layer of sauce, etc., making the last layer of crumbs; bake in oven and eat hot with cold cream.

Tapioca Cream.—In a double boiler cook a pint of milk and a heaping tablespoonful of granulated tapioca until the latter is clear. Add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and the yolk of an egg well beaten. Cook till it coats the spoon. Remove from the fire, add a teaspoonful of vanilla and half as much lemon and the stiffly beaten white of the egg. Beat it into the custard, pour into glasses for serving and set aside to become cold.

English Drop Cakes.—Cream a cupful butter, then add successively a cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful soda dissolved in one-half cupful of sour cream, one-half cupful raisins (seeded and chopped), one-half cupful of almonds (chopped finely), one-half teaspoonful vanilla and two and one-half cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls one inch apart on a buttered sheet in a moderate oven.

Mock Cherry Pie.—Two cupfuls chopped cranberries, a cupful chopped raisins, two cupfuls sugar, a tablespoonful flour, one-half cupful cold water, two teaspoonfuls vanilla. Mix well and bake between two crusts.

This pie was such a favorite with one family last year that the home cook prepared large quantities of this filling, cooked it and sealed it in a stone jar. This will save time and labor as well as the trouble and expense of buying cranberries in small quantities. Best of all, mock cherry pie can be had on short notice.

Apple Junket.—Make the junket as usual. Peel and core three apples, cook them with a little water until they are smooth and without lumps, sweeten to taste and add a little lemon juice and grated rind. Beat up the whites of two eggs until they are stiff; then gradually beat in two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar. When the apple puree is cold mix the two together and beat until thoroughly blended. When the junket is quite firm spread the apple meringue over it and garnish with a few preserved cherries.

Hidden Sweets.

The name of a candy filling or flavoring is concealed in each of these sentences:

1. For this soup you need pepper; mint, too, is excellent for flavoring.
2. I was very sorry to find Donovan ill and very weak.
3. I call my dog Choco. Later I will explain why.
4. A subject of which I am very fond, anthropology, keeps me busy.
5. If you need a piano U. Getin has them for sale.
6. Had Marius and China money when they ruled Rome?

The Artistic Bedroom.

When a bedroom or small dressing room is papered with anything but a plain or neutral paper, bright colored or flowered chintz should never be used, but often a little color is needed to add tone to the room.

In a case of this kind one of the new bedspreads which are so pretty and easily made is just the thing to give the necessary color.

Select a plain white spread of good quality and rather heavy.

Cut from chintz a bunch of roses or a spray of gay colored flowers and baste one in each corner, with a larger one for the center.

Sew to the spread and finish the raw edges with a fine featherstitch or with a long and short buttonhole stitch.

This idea can be carried out for scarfs to cover the dressing table and bureau of the scarf of linen to fit the top of each and finish the edges with a scallop or a hem. Finish this with the stitch that was used on the spread. Cut out the flowers and applique to the edges of the scarf. Bunches of the same flowers can be added to the corners of the white curtains.

Condescension.

"What air them kitchenettes I hear tell of in the cities?" asked Deacon Hyperbole Medders, the somewhat honest agriculturist.

"They're the places, Uncle Hy," explained Byron Downs, his city nephew, "in which is spoiled or cast or somehow produced a flat dweller's daily round of mastication."—Judge.

A COAT FOR LUXURY.

The green Spanish coque feather on the turban blends beautifully with the soft tint of the skins.

This makes a nice house jacket and can be worn under auto coats.

Cleansing of Salad Plants.

Too much care cannot be exercised in the cleansing of pot greens and salads. No one wishes to make a graveled bed of his stomach, and a careful looking over should be given to the greens and also to the washing of them to get visible dirt and especially any invisible infection, this particularly in the case of watercress which grows in streams that may be polluted by sewage or lettuce and celery grown in truck gardens and watered with any water that happens to come handy. Fertilizers, too, have to be taken into account, and the most thorough and painstaking care to clean all such plants should be an inviolable rule. When vegetables come into the house they should not be allowed to remain in the hot kitchen, but at once put in a cool place. If you have a good ground cellar that is ideal. If only a [illegible] wrap in linen or paper bags made for that purpose and put in the icebox.

PLANS TO PLACE YUAN ON THRONE

Will Offer It to Deposed Boy Ruler, Who Will Decline.

CHINA'S CUSTOM ON TRIAL

Must Overcome Many Difficulties in Placing Another Emperor on Throne Without Giving Offense to Believers in Old Chinese Tradition—Petition to Conquer President's "Unwillingness."

Peking.—Present plans for transforming the republic of China back to a monarchy are these:

Delegates elected by the people will assemble in convention to formally determine whether the form of government shall be changed.

That convention will adopt a style of ballot, and members will vote upon the question. It is practically certain that the vote will be unanimous for an empire.

Next, President Yuan Shih Kai will be chosen emperor.

Then Yuan will ascend the dragon throne, and the nine-year-old boy emperor, who was deposed nearly four years ago, will surrender to him all the historic treasures of the Tsing dynasty. Thereupon little Pu Yi's title of emperor will be canceled and he will be made a hereditary prince.

The new dynasty probably will be called the Wu or war dynasty. What the emperor's imperial name will be has not been announced.

Reports that Yuan's seventh daughter will marry the throneless boy emperor thus allying the president with the Tsing dynasty, have been denied. The imperial concubine of the late Emperor Kwangsu objected. Only four years ago Yuan was serving the Tsing dynasty as a minister. The boy emperor was then master of the man now president. If he were to marry Yuan's daughter he would have to pay homage to his father-in-law, which would reverse their relative positions quite out of harmony with Chinese customs and traditions. It is reported the little emperor will marry a Manchu princess in accordance with the traditions of his dynasty.

Because of the general belief among the lower classes that the deposed boy emperor is truly the son of heaven many difficulties must be overcome in placing another emperor on the throne without giving great offense to believers in the old Chinese traditions.

The new emperor must get the boy emperor to turn over the title of "emperor of the great pure" and the traditional imperial seal, which has been in the possession of Chinese emperors for thousands of years. To accomplish this it is reported that after the results of the election have been announced in favor of the monarchy the president will resign and offer the throne to the boy emperor. He in turn will decline the honor, his advisers urging that he is too young for such a great responsibility. Then the demand that Yuan accept the emperorship will be in order, and he will "unwillingly" ascend the throne with the consent of the deposed dynasty.

To overcome Yuan's unwillingness various newspapers and bodies throughout China are preparing memorials entreating him to accept the crown.

Former Emperor Pu Yi will present a petition from the imperial family.

Foreign Minister Lu Cheng Hsiang is to submit a petition in behalf of all the political elements.

Wang Shih Ching, the war minister, will sign a memorial from the military body.

Military Governor Tuan Chih Kuei of Mukden will sign one from the military governors of all the provinces.

Wang Kuan will submit a petition in behalf of the Mohammedans.

Other prominent Chinese will offer memorials from the commercial bodies, educational organizations and from Tibet and Mongolia.

Miss An Tseng Sung, who has been the leader among women favoring the monarchical movement, is to sign a petition for the women of China.

PREACHER BLIND 22 YEARS.

Adventist, Eighty-two, Began at Age of Twenty to Spread the Gospel.

China, Me.—It was thirty years ago that Elder John Roberts Hall began preaching. Though totally blind for twenty-two years, he is still expounding the gospel from the pulpit of Advent churches.

He has preached in more than a hundred towns in Maine. He has gone into the remote coast villages and to many of the islands.

Though eighty-two years of age, every tooth in his head is sound, and he has complete upper and lower sets.

He was scarcely twenty years old when he conducted his first service. He began to preach regularly at twenty-two.

Mr. Hall never writes a sermon. He never makes notes of what he intends to say.

"I depend upon the spirit of God to quicken my understanding," he says.

Mr. Hall was stricken blind twenty-two years ago while chopping wood. He is able to walk about unaided in the town where he lives, but in other places he finds it necessary to have a companion. He still does farm work when at home. He likes the exercise and feels that it has contributed to his excellent health.

FIND FOUR POUND TOOTH.

Discovered in Gravel Pit in Illinois. Belonged to Prehistoric Animal.

Danville, Ind.—A gigantic tooth, believed to have belonged to some prehistoric animal, was found in a gravel pit at Hoopeston. Archie Dukes noticed the tooth in the gravel that had just been brought to the surface. It is of oval shape at the top, is about six inches in length and is two and one-half inches wide at one place. It weighs four and one-quarter pounds.

The ivory on the grinding surface of the tooth is in the form of edges or strips, arranged transversely, and in circular designs, with the dentine worn down between the cutting edges, which are about one-quarter of an inch apart. The cutting edges are black and still retain a brilliant polish. Judging from the size of the tooth, the jawbone of the animal must have been two or three feet in length.

FOUR MADE ILL BY HER UNCANNY POWER

"Witch's" Husband Joins Three Bedridden Sons.

Gloversville, N. Y.—John Bennett, aged, gaunt, helpless, husband of the mysterious woman who was known as the "Witch of the Adirondacks," lies ill of rheumatism in his isolated home at Hope, in wooded and mountainous Hamilton county. There, too, are his three sons, George, thirty-six years, who has been in bed twelve years. Ward, thirty-two, who has not risen from his pillow for fourteen years, and Wank, thirty, who has been bedridden for ten years.

The mother of this unfortunate trio, Mrs. Sarah Bennett, sixty years old, is in the State Asylum For the Insane at Utica. She was committed by Judge Wank Talbot of this place in May, 1914. While she dwelt in her lonely abode at Hope—so ill named for her and her family—she exercised an uncanny influence over her three sons.

Whether it was mesmerism or hypnotism—whatever was her power over them—they shrank and shivered before a glance from her gloomy, deep set eyes. She declared they were ill, that they must remain in bed, and there they stayed, year in and year out, their wills completely subservient to hers.

Their minds became weakened, their bodies atrophied from lack of exercise. They are really ill today, although the farmers whose homes are scattered thereabouts remember them as strapping youths. Frank, the youngest, is in the worst condition, paralyzed from the waist down. His brothers have had their beds moved nearer his that they may help him a little. While their mother lived with them she kept them secluded, yet she gave them care; the Humane society could not aid them; the authorities could not touch them. Their father earned a scanty living from the unwilling soil, but it sufficed.

Old man Bennett was himself susceptible to his wife's strange influence, but when she sought to exercise her power on him he fled and hid in the woods. Dr. E. F. Hagadorn is attending Bennett, who is seventy-one years old. The doctor says Bennett's condition is not serious, but any change must be for the worse.

St. Paul.—William A. Fischbach has undertaken not to have his hair cut till the European war ends.

Fischbach has not had a hair cut for a year. He has a wager, he says, that he will go unshorn till peace is restored.

Greece Stands Back of Premier's Former Neutrality Declaration

London—"Greece has intrenched herself in a position of neutrality, and it will need foreign bayonets to force her to leave her intrenchment."

This is the significant reply of Mr. Gounaris, Greece's coming Prime Minister, to Martin H. Donohue, of the Daily Chronicle, who asked him what the country's attitude would be if the Bulgars crossed thef rrontier.

Speculation over the develapment of an attack on the Entente Allies at Salonica continues. Some newspapers credit the Central Powers with the intention to bear down on Salonica from three sides the Germans forming the centre, with the Turks and Bulgarians on the left and right wings respectively.

From different correspondents come different reports on the situation, some contending the Bulgarians have accomplished all the territorial gains within their immediate ambitions, and therefore will not move further. Other correspondents represent them as being determined to extend their boundaries to include the important post of Salonica.

Germany probably is confronted with the problem of reconciling the conflicting ambitions of her two Balkan allies, Turkeq and Bulgaria, and also trying to keep the friendship of Greece, whose support she is credited with still hoping to gain.

The latest reported Greek move is the prohibition of the export of food supplies from Greece to the Franco-British army at Salonica. General Castelnau, chief of the French general staff, has called on King Constantine, met the Greek army staff and the Ministers of the allied countries.

King Peter of Serbia has arrived in Italy from Avlona and will be the guest of King Victor Emmanuel. King Peter will be entertained in the Royal Palace at Caserta.

MODEL CITY CHARTER PLAN

Outlined by Committee of National Municipal League.

COUNCILMEN AS DIRECTORS

Object Is to Organize the American City Closely on the Lines of a Bank or a Railroad, Including Infusing the Idea of Democracy.

After two years of wrestling with the great task of outlining a model city charter the special committee of the National Municipal league laid an outline or draft before that body at a meeting recently held in Dayton, O., in conjunction with other municipal associations.

The committee would organize the American city closely on the lines of a bank, a railroad—only infusing the idea of democracy.

The city council would stand in place of the board of directors. According to the size of the city, the number of councilmen would range from five to twenty-five. They would be elected at large in nonpartisan elections held on days separate from all other elections. Candidates would run as nonpartisans and without designation on ballots printed so that the names would be rotated in order of precedence.

The committee advocates "election by a preferential vote based on proportional representation, if possible." Terms of councilmen would be four years.

The council would elect one of its members mayor, to serve as the recognised legal head of the city, and would also appoint a city manager, a clerk and a civil service commission of three members for six year terms, removable only by a four-fifths vote of the council and only after written charges and hearing.

Recall of elected councilmen and the initiative and referendum on ordinances were incorporated in the draft, but not by unanimous vote of the committeemen.

The council thus created would be the legislative body, the financial body and the policy determining body, as is the directorate of a bank.

All administrative functions would be turned over to the city manager. He would hold a position corresponding to that of the president in a bank. The draft specifically provides that he would be wholly responsible to the council.

The charter provides fullest freedom in administration for him. Councilmen would be forbidden to deal with any one connected with the administrative service except through the city manager. Any attempt to give orders or otherwise interfere would be made a misdemeanor and penalized by fine and imprisonment.

The city manager would run the city. He would select and employ directors of departments of (1) law, (2) health, (3) finance, (4) safety and (5) works. These directors would be responsible to and only removable by the city manager. They would report only to him.

The term of office of the city manager would be indefinite. He would be removable by the city council only after a public hearing if he had held the office for six months. The draft specifically provides that the choice of a manager would not be limited to the city or state. The committee points out that the German system of advertising for a burgomeister has been "highly successful."

The finances of the city would be on the budget system plan. Provisions are made to prevent or make difficult shifting of appropriations except in dire emergencies.

Methods of levying taxes and making loans and provisions for safeguarding bond issues are included in the draft. Publicity of all contracts and purchases involving more than a stated expenditure is also provided. Municipalisation of public utilities would be permitted and the life of private franchises, as a rule, limited to thirty years.

Such a system of government as is outlined in the model charter offers, the committee believes, a great opportunity for effective and efficient administration and at the same time democratic government. It is offered as a great improvement over the old forms, but not as the panacea for all municipal government shortcomings whose rectification lies wholly in the people.

The model city charter indicates a break in the wave for highly centralized commission city manager form of government. There has been in some quarters an urgent demand for the widest of powers centralised in the city manager. Under the model city charter the council is held as the legislative and policy board, with the control of finances, and the city manager is made absolute only in operation of the city under determined policies. In the discussions there was strong opposition to any absolute centralization of control. Municipal government must not, it was urged, be permitted, even in behalf of efficiency, to become autocratic. The democratic theory must be preserved, but emphasis was laid on divorcing that idea from the idea that there must be partisan government. The model city charter emphasizes civil service protection.

DARING HOLDUP GRIPS NEW YORK

Attempted Robbery In Midday Like Movie Play.

RUNNING PISTOL FIGHT.

Greek Bandit Kills One Bank Messenger and Later Meets Death From Bullet of His Own Gun, Fired by Victim's Companion—Scene In Crowded Business Section.

New York.—A running pistol fight between a bank messenger and a Greek bandit was witnessed recently by the midday crowd in a business section of this city. It had all the aspects of one of those thrilling "movie" plays, only it was true to life, and two are really dead.

W. F. Orleman, who has a wife and child, was about to buy two tickets in a subway station for his fellow messenger, E. Allan Gardner, eighteen years old, and himself when he heard a shot and felt his hand on a bag containing $4,000 pulled. He turned in time to see a man wearing a blue overcoat and cap run up the stairs with the satchel in one hand and a gun in the other. He also saw the body of his companion stretched out on the mezzanine floor of the station.

Without waiting to assist his companion or even to pick up one revolver the holdup man had dropped, Orleman pursued the fugitive. Halfway up the stairs the highwayman—who in a semi-conscious condition gave the name of George De Brosa—turned and fired, the bullet ripping through the velvet collar of Orleman's overcoat an inch from his neck.

Before the Greek could snap the trigger again Orleman threw both arms around him, tore the bag from his hands and seized the pistol. As the robber tore himself away he drew a third pistol from a pocket of his overcoat, squatted at the top of the stairs and, taking deliberate aim, fired again at Orleman, who had fallen on the stairs. The bullet struck a "This Way Downtown" sign. Kneeling on the steps, Orleman fired the revolver he had wrenched from the bandit, the bullet striking him in the hip and bringing him to his knees.

Jumping to his feet, the robber darted around a subway construction shanty and ran across Fourteenth street, turning again to exchange shots with Orleman, who, still holding the bag by its torn straps, was gaining on the wounded man. Policeman Graney of Traffic Squad B, at Fourteenth street and Broadway, where the streets are always jammed with traffic and pedestrians, saw the two dodging cars and automobiles and shooting at each other and took up the chase.

Closely pursued by Graney and Orleman and J. S. Golden, an Interborough special policeman, who had picked up the gun with which the robber had shot Gardner, De Brosa fled through the streets. He did not turn to shoot again, his only object apparently being to escape. He ran through an arcade theater to the Thirteenth street entrance. He kept on running, revolver in hand.

He turned into Broadway with a lead of about 100 feet and, dodging pedestrians, ran to Twelfth street. He then crossed Broadway, reduced his pace to a walk, put his revolver away and struggled as if to throw off his overcoat. But Patrolman Mahoney had seen him running and grabbed him by the collar. The Greek again drew his gun, pushed the muzzle against the breast of the policeman and pulled the trigger, but it missed fire. Then the crowd of pursuers reached the spot, and the Greek was badly beaten.

Policemen saved the would be robber from further beating, and he was taken to a hospital, where he died in a few hours, as did his victim, Gardner.

Orleman later told newspaper men of his thrilling experience in an unconcerned way.

Orleman is the son of Colonel Louis H. Orleman, U. S. A., retired, has been a student and instructor in the Peekskill Military academy and is a graduate of Cornell university. He has been familiar with firearms since a boy.

People used to buy door mats with the word "welcome" worked in big letters and in most cases the spirit of the domicile was in accord with the door mat. It was the custom to have company and enjoy them—to greet the stranger and get a new angle on what was doing on the outside. Then came the time when all this was changed. We put a little reverse English on our welcome and the latest edition of social law decrees that promiscuous neighborly calls are bad form and should be discouraged by putting frost on the windows and ice on the doorstep. LETTER DAY, DECEMBER 30TH, 1915.

You are all requested to write a few lines to some friend OUTSIDE of FULTON to wish him or her a Happy New Year and while you are doing that, we hope that you will write a few lines about our City telling in your own words, about the same as we write here below:

Dear . . . . :

This is the time of year when we all remember our friends and I take great pleasure in wishing you all the happiness in the year 1916. Here in FULTON we have many reasons to feel happy; not only has business been good, but our city is a city of homes and our surroundings are so nice that we MUST feel happy, if we want to or not. We certainly are proud of our home town and we wish that you would be able to witness this some time. We are beautifully located on the Oswego River and we have all the things one can desire. We have for example the most unique CLUB HOUSE in the Country; it is located on an island in the river and you just can imagine what a fine time we are having there in the summer and how we can enjoy the beauties nature has bestowed upon us. Really when it comes to the point, I must admit that I would not like to live anywhere else and I hope that you will find the time to visit us so I may convince you that FULTON is the only city in which to live and be happy.

With many kind regards,

Sincerely,

From England to Dardanelles in One Flight

British Government Employs Curtiss Company to Build Greatest Flying Machine in History.

Buffalo—It was only 16 months ago when Glen Curtiss of Hammondsport was trying out "America," in an effort to perfect the big machine so it would be possible for Lieutenant Porte, now of the British army, to fly across the Atlantic. That machine [illegible] power, but according to news that has reached here, Curtiss is now attempting to build a machine six time as large as the American to fill an order from the British, who, it is now claimed, can fly from London to the Dardanelles. Rumors are to the effect that the big machine will be tried out over Keuka Lake. It will have a carrying capacity of over ten tons and have a cruising radius of 750 miles. Speaking of the advancement of the Curtiss machines since the war began, an expert remarked that prior to the war essential steels for consummation of motors, etc., was secured abroad, and when the war cut off the German supply not a little difficulty was encountered in securing American steel to fill the erquirements. This difficulty has, however, been solved, and the Midvale and Driggs-Seabury companies are supplying a quality of steel that meets all tests of the foreign material on the Curtiss aeroplane as now produced is the Irish linen, which is used as a wing covering.

It is said that America so far has not been able to produce an efficient aeroplane motor or one that could comparatively measure up with those manufactured abroad, but apparentlly Curtiss has developed a motor well up to the best of foreign makes, as is evidenced by the big orders received from the British government.

The Curtiss Company has just developed a 320 horse-power motor that has stood up under the most exhaustive tests by the British engineers who inspected the machines at the companw's plants. His standard 160 horse-power motors will, however, be used in a vertible dreadnaught of the air which is now under construction by the company. The size and carrying capacity of the aeroplane is limited only by the power of the motors. As many planes as is necessary can be added to the aeroplane provided the motors have power enough to drive in on continuous load.

The immense machine under construction will have three planes and a spread of 133 feet. Length over all will be 68 feet and weight of hull, planes, motors, gasolene, equipment and armament will total 21,450 pounds, a matter of more than ten tons to be propelled through air. It will have cruising radius of 750 miles on the 4,750 pounds of 700 gallons of gasolene for which space has been provided. This radius can be increased by supplying more gasolene capacity at the expense of other equipment.

A little over a year ago the America, constructed to make a flight across the Atlantic, which was never attempted because of the outbreak of the war, was the wonder of the aeronautics. Yet, the machine now under costruction by the Curtiss Company is six times the size of the America, has five times the motor power and is accepted as a matter of course.

A recent statement by the Dow, Jones Company that a British aeroplane carrying six officers and 1,000 pounds of baggage a short time ago made a trip from London to the Dardanelles in one continuous flight without mishap was questioned by some as incredible. The Curtiss machine can carry more than ten tons besides the crew nearly 1,000 miles.

Hunter Arms Begin Work This Week

Heavy Demand for Fulton-Made Shotguns Opens Way to Return Mechanics to Former Positions.

"The Hunter Arms company plant will commence work Thursday of this week in all departments and we intend to put to work nearly every man who was formerly one of our active and experienced employes."

This statement was made this morning by Mr. John Hunter to an Evening Times reporter and Mr. Hunter did not hesitate [illegible] operations at the Hunter factory but he did refuse to acknowledge the possibility of the company securing a war order.

At the present time, according to Mr. Hunter, there are only two or three companies manufacturing shot guns, whereas two years ago, or before the war, there were as many as ten, most of which operated on a large scale. Within the past few months, a number of these plants, viz.: The Stevens Arms company, Hopkins-Allen, American Arms company, Colts and Baker have discontinued manufacturing shot guns and are making only rifles. Thel ast named company is making rifle parts for the Westinghouse people who are doing a tremendous amount of gun making for the Allies.

"It has been a complete surprise to us to receive at this time of the year, which is generally dull in the shot gun business, a number of large orders which will keep us busy for a considerable length of time in filling," Mr. Hunter stated, "Generally, the large orders for shot guns are placed in the spring. At this time we are in receipt of "coast orders" which have usually made their appearance in March and the outlook at the present time leads to the belief that we shall have our hands full in filling the orders which are bound to come in. Last year about this time," he continued," owing to the dull business period, none of the jobbers made contracts for shot guns, as everybody had a full supply on hand. Now, it appears that practically all of the same dealers have been exhausted of their supplies. With so many of the shotgun manufacturers turned to rifle making, we are bound to secure plenty of business."

When asked about the employment of help, Mr. Hunter stated that the efforts of the company will be pointed toward securing the re-employment of the old factory force. Mr. Hunter was asked if the resumption of activities at the factory would be lasting. He replied immediately that it is difficult to see anything but full-time operation of a permanent nature in the factory.

An inventory of the stock is being taken this week, which will be completed by Wednesday.

SPECIAL REVENUE TAX MAY BE PAID NOW

The special taxes imposed by Congress are due before January 1, and may be paid any time now. Those who come under this tax should make their returns early in order to avoid standing in line, as has been the case heretofore just before the close of the year. The tax on proprietary articles, documents, etc., is enforced for another year, as Congress has re-enacted the law.

A fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court, is the penalty for the misdemeanor of not paying the special tax.

Brokers, pawnbrokers, commercial brokers, customhouse brokers, proprietors of theatres, museums or concert halls (in proportion to their seating capacities), circuses, public exhibitions otherwise not enumerated, bowling alleys or billard rooms and commission merchants, all come under the special tax law. Then there are the taxes for dealers in leaf tobacco, and tobacco not otherwise provided for if the annual sales exceed $200; also taxes for manufacturers of tobacco and cigars.

"In arriving at the amount of license tax to be paid," says the law, "and in the levy and collection of such tax, each person, firm or corporation engaged in the manufacture of cigars, cigarettes (including little cigars), or tobacco shall be considered and deemed a single manufacturer. And every person who carries on any business or occupation for which special taxes are imposed by this act, without having paid the special tax herein provided, shall, besides being liable to the payment of such special tax, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That the special taxes imposed by this act and payable during the special tax year ending June 30, 1916, shall be collected and paid proportionately for the period during which such taxes shall remain in force during said year."

FISKE O'HARA COMES TO QUIRK THURSDAY

Augustus Pitou, Jr., will present his clever singing star, Fiske O'Hara, at the Quirk Thursday night, December 30, in a new romantic comedy entitled, "Kilkenny," emanating from the gifted pen of Augustus Pitou, Sr., the well known writer of the majority of W. J. Scanlan's and Chauncey Olcott's successes. "Kilkenny" is one of the best Irish stage romances that has been produced in many years. It is idyllic in character, yet pervaded throughout with the sparkling wit of the early part of the last century. There are many scenes of intense dramatic interest, and all through it, the threads of humor, patriotism, pathos and interest wind and unwind in a pleasing and appealing way. The splendid tenor voice of Fiske O'Hara will be heard in several new songs, among which are: "That's What An Irishman Means," "Contrary Mary Clary," "Ireland is Ireland to Me," "Dear Mother Mine," and "Girl of My Heart." The scenic investiture of the piece is reported to be more than usually magnificent, and a most capable company of players surround Mr. O'Hara, among whom are, Mabel Juline Scott, Marie Quinn, Mary Downs, Anna Nichols, Lisle Bloodgood, Eliza Mason, W. T. Morgan, J. P. Sullivan, James Edwards, Henry Duffy, J. E. Miller and W. T. Sheehan.

THRIFT TAKING ROOT

It is an encouraging sign that so many of Fulton's merchants' names appear in this issue under the heading of those who advertised in the local newspapers exclusively. Encouraging because they are beginning to devote attention to one of the most serious drains upon the vitality of this city's business life. The Chamber of Commerce has taken up the problem of correcting an evil which has been allowed to grow, and at its outset has discovered a mere handful of men, who for one reason or another, continue to pay their good money, ostensibly for the purpose of increasing their trade, but which in reality does simply one thing, it builds up institutions in a foreign city, and brings competitive advertising to the door of their customers. Besides it is a liberal sowing of the seeds of disloyalty.

Only a few months ago twelve reasons were published by the Evening Times, at the instance of the Chamber of Commerce, why one should "Trade at Home." Those articles represented the sentiments of men who figured that by inducing the people of this city to patronize the home merchants a hunch would be given business here and they would benefit. Theoretically the dozen reasons were all right, but the ludicrous side appeared by observing the liberal use made of the advertising columns of out of town papers by the men who did not practice what they preached.

When the "Trade at Home" problem is solved, and solved it will be by a man who recognizes the fallacy and inconsistency of the practice of bringing to our door the competitive advertising of the city merchant, one of the biggest propositions involved in the work of uplifting this city from the ruts of indifference will be solved, it is confidently believed, and it is encouraging that the best minds in the work of community building have turned attention to its solution.

INVITES DISASTER

(From Republican State News Bureau)

Vice President W. S. Kies of the National City Bank in an address before the International Trade conference of the National Association of Manufacturers at the Hotel Astor in New York warned his hearers that, when the European war ends, Europe with its cheap labor will be able to undersell them. He declared that the high wage scale here will be a handicap upon the manufacturers in competition with cheap European labor and that only lower wages and a more intensive organization of our industries will permit this country to compete successfully with foreign manufacturers.

Speaking of the restoration of industries in the countries now at war he said:

"Where individual manufacturers need credit and financing to restore a shattered industry, it may be assumed the Government will help. Everything that can possibly be exported will be exported, only those machines, tools and supplies which are necessary for rebuilding industry, and those necessities which cannot be produced will be imported. Goods produced under these conditions, and as a result of this spirit will be sold in the markets of the world in competition with our goods. These goods will be sold at a price that will make them sell, because their sale will be a national necessity.

"It needs no demonstration to prove that if labor costs are inordinarly high here as compared with Europe, the American product cannotb esold in a competitive market except at a loss."

American industries have been able to pay living wages to their employes because a protective tariff kept our markets from being flooded with cheap products from other countries. This country has no such tariff today and the present national administration is not in favor of such a tariff. To face a flood of cheap European products at thec lose of the war with the protective wall down will invite disaster.

STATE'S SCHOOL PUPILS IN SPEAKING CONTEST

In order to stimulate interest in public speaking in the secondary schools of New York State a public contest will be held in Earl Hall, Columbia University, on the evening of Friday, March 3rd, 1916. The contest will be open to accredited representatives of public and private secondary schools outside of New York city. The prizes will be $25, $15 and $15, respectively, and each contestant will receive a commemorative medal.

Inasmuch as it will not be possible to accommodate more than ten speakers at the contest it will be necessary to arrange preliminary contests at a series of centers in order to determine who shall represent a given locality.

The Central New York contest will be in charge of Joseph Bondy, 620 West Genesee street, Syracuse, and any Oswego county student interested should communicate with him.

Opinions

APPLES IN STORAGE

Despite the fact that the apple crop of the United States this year was considerably less than of last year, the supply appears to be sufficient to meet all demands. The office of markets of the Federal Department of Agriculture states that there were 15½ per cent. more apples in storage in the whole country on December 1, the beginning of the cold storage season, than on the same date last year.

In New York state exactly the same quantity of apples was reported to be in cold storage on December 1 as was reported on the same date in 1914. There was a total of 1,410,335 barrels. No other State reported half as many, the nearest being Illinois, Missouri and California.

That the quantity of apples in storage is as large now as it was a year ago, despite the smaller yield, is probably due to the fact that a larger percentage of the crop was marketed this year. Be this as it may, a good supply of the fruit is assured at fairly reasonable prices.—Watertown Standard.

LICENSE DRINKERS

The proposition of the National Defense Association that all drinkers be licensed and the licenses be limited to two drunks a year, doesn't seem to be popular and a proposition to ask the legislature of the state of New York to make such a law is called fantastic. But why not? The drinker is the man that society gets after; liquor does no harm if no one drinks it. It would appear that the drinker is the very one that should be licensed, and, of course, his character for self-control would be the qualification for obtaining a license. It would solve the question a great deal better than simply licensing the saloon keeper. It might make quite a revenue to the state, though as a rule there would probably not be many applications. — Watertown Times.

THE AWAKENING OF HENRY FORD

Henry Ford, the Detroit capitalist who undertook to bring to an end the conflict which has involved practically all Europe in the most sanguinary and at the same time senseless war recorded in the Book of Time, has awakened from his beatific trance. Disappointed because not even quasi official recognition was given his mission, and nearly if not quite distracted by the bickerings of his invited guests, the man of automobiles, motors, action, and incidentally of millions, hurriedly took ship by night for home. leaving some of the recipients of his bounty at Christiania, making a "rough house" because the business manager of the expedition declined to settle their personal laundry bills.

Henry Ford, at the expense of what is apparently a temporary mental breakdown, has rediscovered the truth that the mere possession of material wealth, however obtained, does not bring with it the power to perform miracles. It would have been little short of a miracle if the heterogeneous collection of people which embarked with him on the Oscar II. had dwelt together in harmony during the long two weeks of the ocean voyage. It would have been a still greater miracle if even the few remaining neutral nations of Europe had recognized a peace movement which had no official standing at the capital of the country from which it emanated.

It should, though, be recorded that Henry Ford is a game loser. In the hour of his humiliation and deep chagrin he does not murmur. He did not even indulge in the luxury of leaving his bickering guests stranded on a foreign shore. His last act before he was taken by his physician to his cabin on the home-coming steamer was to provide a fund of something like $250,000 for the furtherance of the project which he was about to abandon.

There need, therefore, be no apprehension regarding the fate of the survivors of the expedition, assuming, of course, that Mr. Ford's business representative allowed his heart to soften to the extent of settling the Christiania laundry men's claims. Meanwhile, the war will go on just the same as if fortune had not favored the wealthy but now disguested Detroit manufacturer.—Rochester Chronicle- Democrat.

IT MUST BE UNDERTAKEN

Tariff revision must be undertaken unless the country and government are both to suffer. The prospect of a dumping of goods from abroad in the period to follow the war is a serious one. To leave the ingress open would be to invite the flood. Not only for revenue, then, but actually for Protection—hated word— it may become necessary for the administration to raise the barriers.

Without higher import duties the government is in a bad way, beating about unavailingly in the hopeless search for new, remunerative, painless fiscal stratagems. The taxpeyers are likely to suffer from no man knows what experiment upon their purses. They face the prospect of seeing this country made an economic dumping ground within three months after peace. But whether the administration has the courage to undo its own work and apply a remedy in the form of a broad, moderate Tariff increase all along the line remains to be seen. —New York Evening Sun.

MEET TO SOLVE BIG PROBLEMS

Marketing the Main Object of a Congress Now in Session—Pan-American In Nature.

Washington—"The first function of the government in its relation to the marketing problem is to develop a united mind and a real knowledge of the broader questions at issue," according to Dean Beverly T. Galloway of the New York State College of Agriculture in a paper presented here today before the Pan-American Scientific Congress. He maintains that the state, and the state only, can bring about a true understanding and appreciation of the social, moral, ethical, and business questions involved,

He has come to this conclusion because of the large amount of selfish and confused ideas that have grown up through the self-centered organizations that are working for their own interests. These organizations, he maintains, have not looked towards the development of the whole question of marketing, but have aimed through special legislation and other means to bring about private gain at the expense of the public.

Legislative Needs

"We can sweep aside at once all those proposed forms of legislation that aim to do things for the farm producer that he ought to do for himself. There should be no place anywhere for class legislation because the farmer does not need, and should not be regarded as needing, special privileges from the government. Difficulties can not be met and overcome by government fiat, but only through the observation of economic laws. Uniform, constructive legislation is required which does not recognize more or less meaningless boundary lines. View the situation with reference to protecting the life and the health of the people; human life and health have an equal value everywhere in our country, yet our health laws vary with state boundaries. Pure food, too, is pure food wherever found. The distressing blight of child labor can not be checked or mitigated without uniform legislative action throughout the land.

Lack of National Control

"Because of this lack of uniformity in the application of sane laws for the benefit of the whole people, control of various commodities has fallen into the hands of those who are not in the least interested in either the great body of producers or consumers.

"In the handling of cotton, of grain, of meats, and of milk, all vital to our welfare, uncontrollable concentration has developed to the point where the concentrators have made it impossible for those who provide the raw products to any further take the risks. The raising of cattle in the middle west is no longer a business with the farmers; it is a gamble."

Fixing Grades and Standards

"Government may properly lend its aid in fixing standards and many present difficulties can be overcome if agricultural products entered trade on a basis of fixed grades just and fair to all parties involved. Only the government can determine the bases of these standards, and the determination can come only through painstaking scientific and technical work. Government may also lay down principles tog overn the storing and warehousing of farm products. Here again we must guard against the fallacy that relief will come through mere legislative action without regard to the economic and other laws involved. A fiat that eggs should not stay in storage longer than thirty days or ninety days will not solve the problem of the storage, marketing, and distribution of eggs. The government may also develop an informational service in regard to marketing and distributing farmers' products, similar in its methods and scope to the weather and crop reporting service.

"Summarizing, the government's relation to the marketing problem is primarily one of establishing principles, of educating the public to the full knowledge of the economic, ethical, and moral questions involved; of the development of social consciousness, and of establishing and maintaining social justice to the end that all men at all times receive due compensation for the labor of their hands and minds."

The Pan-Amerivcan Scientific Congress at which Dean Galloway spoke is the second of its kind which has been held in the western hemisphere, the first having been held in Chile in 1908. It is an outgrowth of previous scientific congresses that have been held in Latin American countries, a plan which was afterwards broadened to include the United States.

BEAR EATS PEANUTS AND ALSO A FINGER

New York—Up in the home town of Sammy, the big polar bear of the Central Park menagerie, they never had peanuts when he was a cub and as a result when goober are served his table manners are not of the best. Yesterday, for instance, he bit off the right index finger of Andrew White, who lives at No. 108 West Eighty-ninth street.

There was a large attendance at the menagerie, and nearly a hundred persons, including many women, were about the bear's cage when Mr. White was furnishing the food for Sammy. The bear, frisky because of the cold and the coming of the snow, ate peanuts indifferently for a time and then, without so much as a growl, accepted a peanut and took the finger with it.

ADMIRAL DEWEY IS 78 YEARS OF AGE

Washington, D. C.—Admiral George Dewey, U. S. N., victor at the battle of Manila Bay, was seventy-eight years old today. He is enjoying good health and retains an active interest in the programme for preparedness. Recently he aided in the preparation of a report of the General Board, of which he is chairman, recommending a navy that will be able to cope with any enemy fleet which may be sent to these shores.

Many of his friends remembered that this was his birthday, and congratulatory messages and calls were received at his residence in K street. Admiral Dewey spent the day quietly taking his customary drive about the suburbs of Washington this afternoon.

"FOXY GRANDPA" DEAD AT VENICE, CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles—Venice is a city of sorrow. All business will be suspended this afternoon while the largest funeral that ever passed through the streets of the beach city is held there.

"Foxy Grandpa" is dead. The lovable old character of the beach who had not been called by the name of Alexander Douglas for years died of senility aged 80 years. He was the foster-father of a thousand or more beach babies. Annually he held birthday parties at the auditorium for the tots. The city trustees will attend the funeral in a body.

Douglas, who was for years a minsrel with Christy, Carncross, Dixey, Hooley and Haverley, leaves a widow and daughter at Grand Rapids, Mich.

MILLARD FRANCIS BREAKS ARM FOR THIRD TIME

Millard Francis, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Francis has broken his arm for the third time this year.

Millard had just returned from the country where he was recovering on July 5th, and while passing in front of his home in Fay street he slipped on a bit of ice on the sidewalk—result again, a broken arm.

Evidently Millard has the habit, which is a bad one and it is to be hoped the lad will for his own comfort outgrow it before many years.

BOARD TO ACT UPON TOWN DIVISION

Attorneys for the taxpayers of the West end of Oswego Town, who are fighting against the division of the town, were in conference yesterday with Supervisor R. L. Callison and others in relation to the plan of campaign to be followed.

The Board will meet on Wednesday to pass upon the matter and while the attorneys would not make public their exact plans, they indicated that a legal move would be made today to prevent the board from acting. As the action must be taken at a regular session if an injunction is secured it will probably hold the matter up until a year from this time, at least.

In the meantime the new board will take office.

Spanswick Co. Stockholders Interviewed, Present Facts to Readers of Evening Times

The Fulton Evening Times is out to give its readers news—news of interest. We know that the citizens of Fulton, small and great, are for "Fulton First, Last and All the Time." We know that everybody is interested in the growth of our city and that they will be pleased to learn the facts connected with the proposed change in location of the knitting factory which has become, what we are pleased to think, a permanent fixture.

It was learned yesterday that a meeting of the board of directors of the Knitting company was to be held last night. Early this morning a reporter set about of unearth, as far as possible, what decision, if any, had been reached, at the session.

Prominent stockholders and directors were interviewed, among them Mr. W. H. Spanswick, president, and manager of the company.

Mr. Spanswick—Reticent

When an Evening Times reporter called at the factory in Erie street this morning, he found the genial president "up to his ears in work." When asked as to what had been done at the meeting of the directors last night, the gentleman replied that the secretary of the company was in possession of the minutes and might be induced to divulge certain parts of the proceedings, adding that, personally, he had nothing to say for publication that would interest any one. He said he believed the question should be settled among the stockholders. If the out of town holders of shares of the company's stock were in position to show a good proposition and an advantage by moving, it was the duty of every stock holder to vote "Yes," and not stand in his own light. If, on the contrary, the resident shareholders could prove it is best to remain in the present location, it is up to the outsiders to get in line and be peaceable.

"Is it true that you have received a flattering offer from a knitting mill in the Mohawk valley?" Mr. Spanswick was asked: "Now, you are trying to get me to blow my own horn," was his guarded reply. Mr. Spanewick spoke very highly of Fulton, its people, institutions and advantages. He emphasized the fact that very few small cities could boast of such financial institutions as were to be found in Fulton.

Other Stock Holders Talk Freely

Other stockholders and directors, while they refused to permit the minutes of the meeting to be published, were more inclined to talk over the situation. Among other things, they said: "We regard the Wm. H. Spanswick Manufacturing Company as a Fulton industry. Simply because some of the stock was sold to non-residents is no reason why they should control it; and, if we can prevent it, they are not going to do so. The majority of the home stockholders purchased stock in this company because they believed that it would be a benefit to our city to have such an industry located here." Continuing, they said, "As the years go by and the plant still exists, growing larger all the time, we are of the opinion that our judgment was good at the time we bought stock in this company. The plant enjoys as good advantages right here as knitting mills which are located in what are called knit goods towns. There are no disadvantages that cannot be overcome. Give that little mill ample working capital, in order that it may increase its production, and it will show you something. Capital is all that we lack at the present moment. We have a plant of which we are justly proud; we have an excellent organization; we have a good reputation among the trade; we have business enough booked to keep us running day and night for a year. Now, all we want is some additional capital, in order that we may increase our output. Maybe, the outsiders will beat us to it, and be the first to deliver the goods; but we are going to see what we can do right here, and we hope to be in position to give them the laugh and inform them that Fulton is a live town and does not intend any good thing shall get away from it.

"It now remains to be seen, who will win."

The Evening Times is with those who would keep this busy bee with us. Let us all ask the question, "What can I do," bearing in mind the fact, that the way to build a bigger and better Fulton is for every man to put his shoulder to the wheel.

Another meeting will be held in the near future to determine what shall be done as the out of town stockholders are trying hard to get the plant removed to a larger town where it could be financied to a better advantage and increase the out-put to a greater extent. The mill now has more orders than it can fill and with increased capital would work night and day until next September.

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY IN TWO DAYS' DRIVE

.aPris—Everywhere along the Western front the Germans are "feeling out" the allies' lines for the weak points on which to direct their great offensive.

They are doing this with a supreme disregard both of men and material. Two days of continuous fighting between Ypres and Armentieres on Tuesday and Wednesday resulted in a loss to the Germans of 8,000 effectives, says the war correspondent of La Liberte.

The object of the Germans was to test the strength of the British lines at this point.

Behind clouds of poison gases, the Teutons made a dozen attacks, but, where the British artillery and machine guns failed completely to break the oncoming human waves, the assailants were driven back with the bayonet. Not an inch of ground was gained.

"The wind is blowing from the east," telegraphs the Temps correspondent. "This will permit the Germans to use asphyxiating gas, and it is only elementary prudence for us to don the masks and man the batteries."

PANAMA'S BIG GUNS SHOOT 21 MILES

New York—Sixteen-inch guns, the largest ever built, will protect the entrances to the Panama Canal. These monstrous pieces of artillery are stationed at the Pacific end of the great waterway. They use projectiles weighing a ton apiece, and can carry them with wonderful accuracy a distance of twenty-one miles.

The Pacific defences, which are the stronger, are situated on islands three miles out from the mouth of the Canal. With some smaller pieces, they will guard "The Great Ditch" from attack by water. The other guns and howitzers are to be utilized for land attacks, especially on the locks.

The whole interesting subject of Isthmian fortifications and defensive force is vividly described in "The Panama Canal," by Frederic J. Haskin. This valuable book is being distributed by the New York American at a nominal price, which puts it within reach of all. Read the announcement of distribution on another page, and get your copy today. Every loyal American should posses the volume. A perusal of it will supplement pride with knowledge and information about this great American achievement of peace.

TEUTONS SMASH LINES BY ROLLING BOULDERS

London—Huge boulders rolled by the Austrians down the mountain slopes on the Italian troops in the Riocameros valley was an "incident" of today's fighting in the Tyrol.

The Italians were smashed by the man-made avalanche, and suffered severe losses. The Italian officia issued in Rome today says:

"During the day there have been artillery duels on some portions of the front, especially in the Giudicaria valley, where the Italian forts in the Lardaro group and the opposing Austrian batteries were engaged.

"Intense artillery duels have occurred along the Tyrol-Trentino front, the Austrian batteries purposely inflicting damage on the inhabited regions.

"In the Riocameros valley the Austrians rolled huge boulders down the slopes, causing severe damage. troops and an ammunition train on the march.

"There is nothing new on the Isonzo front."

The official report of the Austrian Headquarters says:

"Italian Front — Yesterday the Italian artillery fire was concerntrated against the bridgehead positions at Tolmino. Their bombardment continued throughout the day. An Italian company which advanced up the north slope of Monte Altissimo was repulsed."

QUAIL IN POULTRY YARD.

Delaware Farmer Finds Fourteen, Who Make Themselves at Home.

Bridgeville, Del.—Henry Savage, a Nanticoke Hundred farmer, has a covey of quail and has become so attached to them that they will be spared from the hunter's gun, and he intends making a business of raising them for the market.

Recently Savage went out into his poultry yard and was astonished to find fourteen quail feeding with his chickens. At night they went in the poultry house and huddled in a corner while the chickens took their accustomed roosts.

BIG IMPETUS FOR ESTABROOK BOOM

"Dark Horse" For Republican Presidential Nomination.

NATIONAL DEFENSE PIONEER

Known as Fearless Advocate of Traditional Republican Principles—Also Recognized as One of Ablest Campaigners in United States.

Far and away the most interesting phase of the national political situation is the movement that has brought Henry D. Estabrook, of New York and Nebraska, so prominently to the front as a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. First spoken of as a possibility in connection with the presidency less than six months ago, Mr. Estabrook is today one of the leading candidates, with evidences of strength that are a source of concern to the friends of the other aspirants.

He has made speeches in every important city in the East, Middle West, and Far West, an arduous campaign experience that has put him in good condition to meet the rigorous demands made on the head of a party's national ticket, and his friends in Nebraska and other States have formed Estabrook organizations and are going after national delegates in the most vigorous fashion.

Impartial observers agree that this development of the Estabrook boom has no parallel in the political history of the last 25 years, and they are beginning to inquire whether the popular demand for new leadership is actually so strong as to give this new man the greatest political prize over which men struggle.

An All Around Big Man.

Estabrook is a big man physically, mentally and politically. Quite six feet in height, erect, rugged, he would be a man of commanding presence in any gathering. His mental attainments are attested by his signal success in the practice of law and by the widespread interest in his every public utterance on governmental, economic and social problems. He has always been a student and when he discusses a subject he speaks with the authority of one who has mastered it. His conclusions are invariably sound, and, once he has arrived at them, they are proclaimed frankly and fearlessly, for he is essentially a man with the courage of his convictions.

For instance, he has been one of the most drastic critics of President Wilson and the present Democratic administration, arraigning them for their tariff law which bankrupted the federal treasury and which places the American farmer, the American manufacturer, and the American laborer at the mercy of foreign competition, and for a foreign policy which has destroyed the respect that the American flag and American citizens once commanded in every quarter of the globe.

A Preparedness Pioneer.

Likewise Mr. Estabrook was the first man prominently before the public to outline a concrete program of national defense, which he presented in an address before the American Bankers' Association September 8th last at Seattle, characterized by the Seattle Times as "one of the most remarkable addresses ever delivered in the Northwest," and he was the first Republican leader to point the way to the reunion and harmonizing of all elements of the party, his "Get-Together" plea before the McKinley Club of Omaha, Nebraska, last October, having attracted widespread attention.

From the time Mr. Estabrook opened the Republican National campaign in Chicago in 1896 he has been recognized as one of the ablest campaigners in the United States, and there have been few speakers in greater demand.

The issues in the great contest of 1916, which is to restore the Republican party to the administration of national affairs, will be Protection, Prosperity, and Preparedness, in Mr. Estabrook's judgment, with "Get-Together" as the slogan for Republicans of every shade of opinion. He has been preaching this gospel in all sections of the country, and has met with enthusiastic receptions everywhere he has gone.

Ferdinand's Crown.

The king of Bulgaria has a crown that he has never worn in public. In 1902 "Prince" Ferdinand thought the time ripe for proclaiming himself king and ordered a diadem from Brussels. The "concert of Europe" ordained otherwise, and the crown was relegated to a cupboard until 1908, when the prince was elevated to kingship. Austria, however, prohibited Ferdinand's coronation, so that he has not yet worn the crown publicly.

NATION BOUND TO HOLD PROSPERITY

New York—Peace will not be immediately followed by the collapse of America's business boom.

When Europe's "war orders" cease "peace orders" will at once have to be filled,—millions, billions of dollars of them.

The demand for rehabilitation purposes will tend to keep American prosperous for maybe two or perhaps three years.

After that the outlook becomes too obscure to even guess at.

This is a composite reading or our financial, industrial and commercial horoscope by the nation's foremost men of affairs.

Nobody now looks for convulsions on the declaration of peace, no matter how suddenly hostilities may stop. Not long ago the vaguest rumors of peace overtures caused "Wall street" to shiver.

The truth is that, enormous though our exports of munitions are, our business activity is steadily becoming more and more active, arising from improvement in our domestic conditions.

This condition,—however artificial and precarious "war order" business,—of solid home trade and expansion is destined to continue.

U. S. REPORT TELLS OF BIG HOSIERY PROFITS

Washington — American hosiery manufacturers who opposed tariff cuts on knit goods are now making nearly twelve per cent on capital invested, the Department of Commerce announces after investigation.

They could increase that margin through better methods in the manufacture and sale of their goods, the report adds.

The report, transmitted to President Wilson today by Secretary Redfield, is the second of a series in connection with the bureau's inquiry into the manufacture of clothing in the United States.

Highest profits, the report says, are made on the class of goods meeting foreign competition.

Imports are shown to have dropped from $6,400,000 to $3,800,000 within the last six years.

Americans were found to be wearing silk hosiery more and more. As a result, cotton hosiery manufacturers are making less profit than silk manufacturers.

WANTS TO LEVY ON MUNITIONS

Congressman Believes Europe Should Pay Toll on Exports of Arms and Supplies.

Washington—"If the tax on munitions of war proposed by my bill had been in effect last year," said Representative Shackleford, "we would have taken for public purposes not less than $250,000,000 from the ungodly profits of the men who are rolling up wealth by manufacturing munitions of mutilation and murder for the governments of warring Europe.

"Our people would not have had to pay a cent of this tribute. It would have been added to the cost of shells and shrapnel, rifles and machine guns shipped abroad.

"Much of the panic which has caused the present cry for largely increased expenditures for our army and navy is due to contemplation of the horrors of the European war. Why should not the nations responsible for that outbreak of rapine and murder pay a part, at least, of the expense it is going to cause us?

"By levying an impost upon the output of munitions factories this end can be accomplished. Our own people are against war. They are horrified by the spectacle presented on the battlefields of Europe.

"Very many Americans hold that our citizens should be prohibited from furnishing any fuel whatsoever for that flame. But some people doubt whether an effort to shut off altogether the shipment of arms and munitions would not be a violation of the spirit of exact neutrality.

"Nobody questions, however, our right to tax this business and to tax it heavily."

Bill to Tax Munitions

Mr. Shackleford's bill, which would impose a tax of 20 per cent of the selling price upon all munitions of war made in the United States and not sold for consumption in this country, will be a subject of immediate discussion in the Ways and Means Committee after the holiday recess.

It is admittedly imperfect as yet, being, as its author declares, merely the skeleton upon which the committee can build legislation to accomplish a university desired end.

Many forces may be expected to get behind the Shackleford bill. A very large element in Congress would like to see an embargo put upon the export of munitions of war. Back of the Congressmen who hold to this view is a tremendous public sentiment

Indeed, that sentiment is vastly stronger than its reflection in Congress, and many Representatives are restrained from taking such action in response to the remands of their constituents only by the urgency of the Administration, which is trying to supress even discussion of an embargo.

Men in this dilemma will welcome the Shackleford bill as an opportunity to express the resentment of their constituents against the policy for furnishing the allies with munitions without at the same time breaking with the Administration.

Support for Measure

Naturally, to avowed pacificists in Congress, and they are many, will be with it to a man. The Representatives who oppose preparedness because of its cost will welcome this opportunity to put part of that cost on those who coin war into cash.

The ingenius dreamers who think that all the efforts being made by such patriotic organizations as the Navy League and the National Security League are formented by cannon-makers seeking profit will hail this opportunity to fine the makers of munitions. The Democrats who disapprove the President's programme of taxing steel, gasoline, automobiles, bank checks and small incomes—that is to say practically all the Democrats—ought to be for the proposition to a man.

The fight for the measure must begin in the Ways and Means Committee. Representative Shackleford, of Missouri, who fathers the bill, was long a member of committee, retiring from it only because of ill-health.

Had he retained his membership he, and not Claude Kitchin, would have been the ranking member, entitled to the chairmanship upon the retirement of Oscar Underwood. Because of this long association with the committee Mr. Shackleford is eminently fitted to push the fortunes of his bill before that body.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

"I never had a chance," said a young man to me the other day. "I'm thirty-one years old with a family to take care of. I have no money saved because it takes all I earn to keep us going, and my business isn't as good as it used to be. If I didn't have so many to support I could save money and branch out in business."

This young man was wearing three-dollar ties, six-dollar shirts, and ten-dollar shoes. He dances till so early in the morning that his brain is asleep and he is in no condition to pay strict attention to business. He has had his chance; he has it every day, but his ears are closed to opportunity saying to him: "Save your health; save your money."

The men who attain the top do not get there through chance or luck. They aimed high and made every minute count. They saved their time. A start of fifteen minutes late each working day means a loss of nine and three-fourths eight-hour days a year. Almost ten days work could be done by always being on time. And time is money.

Only fifteen minutes wasted daily means ninety-one hours a year, or almost eleven and one-half eight-hour days. A minute saved each day is a gain of over six hours. A minute saved every hour of an eight-hour day means forty-one hours, or five eight-hour days a year. Use system to save time, and put that time to some good use.

This is what Ernest Stout, a Chicago newspaper man forty-five years old, who passed the State Bar examination a few weeks ago, did. Five years of the strenuous life of a journalist were spent in preparation for the test, which included questions in history, mathematics, and the sciences. Most of his studying was done on the street cars, between assignments or to and from work.

Frank O. Wetmore, who will become president of the First National Bank of Chicago at the end of the year, who began work in the bank as messenger when eighteen years old, says a young man need not fear big business or the big corporations.

"Family and pull," he says, "have less influence in the $100,000,000 corporation than in the small business organization. There is more room at the top than at the bottom for the well-balanced mind and the man who wants to work."

Mr. Wetmore says that while he filled one job he was always preparing for the one just above, reading and working in the evenings, and so the raises and promotions took care of themselves. These men, like many other successful ones, give no credit to luck or chance. Their success is due to enterprise and hard work.

BISHOP OPPOSES ALL NEW YEAR'S REVELRY

Rochester—Bishop Hickey's special letter to the clergy and laity of this diocese calls for special services on New Year's eve as the most fitting observance of closing the old year and beginning of the new, and condemns thep ractice of celebrating this time with unseemly revelry.

The Bishop says in part:

In the exercises of the authority divinely commissioned to her, the Catholic Church has designated certain days of the year commemorating great religious truths as holy, and has legislated that her children regard and observe them accordingly.

That time is at hand when the church celebrates, with much solemnity and joy, two of these feasts; Christmas, commemorating the birth of our Saviour, and its active day, the circumcism of the Divine child. The first of these observances falls in the last week of the calendar year; the other on the first day of the new year. There is, indeed, a grouping of great historic events and of joyous incentives within this privileged octave. The story of Bethlehem, which is one of hope and love, describes in thrilling accents the acceptance, by a divine Teacher, of privation, and pain as against comforts and pleasure, to give us God's expression as the truest and best in seeking perfection here and happiness hereafter.

To celebrate these great days in satisfying natural appetites, or in seeking pleasures of the sense, is to act in contradition to the event that is actually commemorated, and is unworthy of one who calls himself Christian. To spend any time, on any day, but especially on a day that is holy, because of its relation to God, in a manner that is unbecoming Christian manhood or womanhood, should be condemned by sommon consent of intelligent and self-respecting communities.

GERMANS HIRE 250,000 POLES, BERLIN ASSERTS

Berlin (via Sayville)—"The London Times, on November 25, and 26, published an article about the misery caused by the German authorities in the occupied parts of Russian Poland," says an item given out by the Overseas News Agency today: "In reality the German authorities did everything in order to restore economic activity and furnish food to the occupied districts.

"The grain harvested there was entirely used for the population. Since it was impossible to bring raw materials for the re-opening of factories, the German authorities began road building in order to give work to the population. Now 250,000 Poles are occupied in this way.

"Besides, the authorities instituted employment offices for those willing to work outside their home districts."

AUSTRALIAN'S WARNING CRY

Lieut. Simons Urges Martial Training If This Nation is to Some Day Stand for Liberty.

New York—Declaring that the Pacific eventually must become the ocean of destiny, for which the white and yellow races will battle for control, Lieutenant J. J. Simons, of Australia, here in charge of the Australia Cadets, urged last night before an audience at the Plaza Hotel, a system of preparedness in this country.

In describing the Australian system of military training, he said his common wealth believed that some day she must play her part, and that she was hearkening to the gospel of preparedness here, believing that the day may come when the United States will stand alone against the death of freedom.

"Where in the factories, stores and banks of this city can be found ten per cent of the total fighting males who even know how to load a magazine rifle?" he asked. "We have heard of America imposing peace on the world, but unless she is prepared to do it, it sounds to me like a pink winged theory. I want to tell you how eagerly Australia is looking to the United States, where you are now preaching the gospel of preparedness. We are reaching the point where perhaps in the history of the world the United States may be the only Power to prevent liberty from perishing from the earth.

"The Orient is awakening. Here in this country seven million rifles are being manufactured for China. Neutrality prevents me from mentioning any of the other Eastern races."

Lieutenant Simons aroused great applause when he said that in Australia the school child tells inquirers that the three greatest of American Presidents were Washington, Lincoln and Roosevelt. He explained that under the Australia system the boys from the ages of 12 to 14 years practise gymnastics, and from the ages of 14 to 18 learned rifle and company drill. From 18 to 26 years, he said, the Australian is a citizen soldier, and as a result of the system the country has six hundred thousand men drilled to protect it. War, he said was hated like pestilence in Australia, but the democracy which has been modelled after that of the United States is to be preserved against encroachment.

HOBO FRAT DISBANDS.

Injury to "Bumming" Freshman Decides Missouri Students.

Columbia, Mo. — "Announcing that they believed it best for the interests of the university, the members of the Quo Vadis club, the hobo fraternity at the University of Missouri, figuratively hopped off the blind baggage and decided that hereafter they would "ride the cushions."

The members voted to disband following the injury recently to a freshman who was "bumming" into Moberly. The discipline committee of the university issued a statement exonerating the club and saying the student injured had no connection with the organization.

The Quo Vadis club was founded in 1907 on the principle of "a thousand miles without a red." It numbered in its membership many of the leading students, including several athletes. Jack London, Homer Croy and J. Eads How were honorary members.

The school in question is in District No. 2 in Medicine township, and Miss Mary Phillips is the teacher.

JACKIE SAUNDERS

Jackie Saunders, whose blonde top and winsome grace are known from coast to coast wherever there are motion picture theatres, was once an artist's model, and as such brightened the covers of many popular magazines. Such famous artists as Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, and Clarence Underwood found in her an uncommonly attractive subject. As all three of them are noted for their pictures of beautiful women, it may very readily be guessed that Miss Saunders is blessed with unusually good looks. To Mr. Underwood is due her appearance in motion pictures, since he told her once that she should photograph well and suggested that she try to secure an engagement in the movies.

Miss Saunders, with her usual promptness of decision, at once began to look for a picture engagement. She secured one on her nerve, for she assured the director of a large producing company that she was experienced in picture work—only, she didn't tell him what kind of pictures. Her very first scene was a particularly trying one, for it was taken on the sidewalk in front of Grace Church, New York, before a mob of curious onlookers. Our blonde heroine nearly died from fright, and went through her part in a perfect maze, but, luckily for her, the pictures when developed and projected proved to be perfect.

Miss Saunders appears in many of the Pathe pictures that are made by Balboa, and has been with the latter company for over a year. Her contract has still three years to run—sure proof that the public likes her work. "The Shrine of Happiness," a five part Pathe Gold Rooster picture in which she stars, was paid the compliment of being sent to France to be colored, being the first five-reel American picture to be so treated.

Notes For The Beauty Seeker

Beauty is rather an indefinite thing at best. What spells beauty to some eyes means nothing at all to others. Every one seeks it, yet no one can exactly define it. It is, after all, more a matter of comparison perhaps than anything else, for the village belle who is ravishingly lovely in the midst of her plain companions may seem gawky and without charm when placed in the midst of city beauties.

The girl who lives close to nature inherits a large part of Mother Earth's rich dowry of beauty. Nature bestows on its children gratis all the complexion lotions and hair tonics which the beauty doctors prescribe for large fees. The trouble is that city dwellers are so far away from nature's heart that they have no idea of the gifts she is willing to bestow. They depend on creams, powder and rouges to do for them what nature would gladly do if they would allow her.

If city women would only forswear the artificialities and rely on nature to supply their needs they would find their complexions rejuvenated. Complexions grow old before their time with the constant application of powders and rouges. To free them from this bondage of cosmetics means to restore natural loveliness again.

Beautiful complexions are only possible where health abounds. A clear skin is, as a rule, the result of good circulation, and in order that the blood may flow freely plenty of outdoor exercise is necessary. Hours in the open air are a part of nature's beauty treatment, which is the reason why the country maid has the advantage of her city sister.

Two of the finest skin tonics in nature's storehouse are rainwater and milk. When the rainy days come, instead of sitting down and bewailing the awful weather, just thank your lucky stars for the splendid tonic you are obtaining free of charge and put out all the receptacles handy to catch as much of it as possible. Keep a big bottle just for this purpose and into it pour the rainwater as you catch it. Use it on your face whenever you wash, and you will notice how it softens and clears the skin. Rainwater is wonderful for the hair also, and one woman with the most exquisite head of hair imaginable declares that she owes it entirely to the fact that she only uses rainwater with which to wash her hair.

Milk is a splendid skin tonic and has the effect of imparting its own color to the skin on which it is used. The only drawback to the constant usage of milk is that it is apt to grow a soft down on some faces. Those who use cold cream with impunity will find that milk has much the same effect, only more so.

The Saving of A Household

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

When Helen announced to me that her mother must come to live with us I knew at once that we had come down with a severe case of mother-in-law. There was no escape from the matter. Mrs. Goldwin had been living with a sister who had died, and she was now alone. Helen was her only child, and to refuse the old lady would be sacrilegious. For me to refuse my wife's desire would be equally so. I consented, well knowing that if the mother-in-law remained with us long enough I should be obliged to go elsewhere.

"How does your mother stand on the votes for women question?" I asked Helen.

"She's a vigorous anti."

Since I made no reply to this Helen wanted to know why I asked and when I gave no satisfactory reply said that this would not make any difference, since we were both indifferent on the subject.

Mrs. Goldwin came and saw and conquered. There was no reason for our not getting on pleasantly together except that for forty years she had managed her household and she was too old to go into any one else's house and relinquish the habit. If our maid did not suit her the maid must leave. This kept my wife changing servants and me in misery. We finally gave up trying to keep one, Helen saying that she thought that, with her mother's help, she could easily do the work herself.

This made matters worse, because Mrs. Goldwin insisted on having everything done her way, and Helen was obliged to do it all over again. The old lady might have made possible our going out occasionally evenings by taking care of our little girl, two years old, but she positively declined to take upon herself such responsibility, declaring that "if the the child should get the croup what would I do?" Nevertheless when Helen was present her mother insisted on directing her in her care of the child.

Something must be done. It wouldn't do for me to tell Helen that I was concocting a plan to get rid of her mother. In that case I stood a good chance of being the one to leave. I was obliged to keep my own counsel. One day I announced to Helen that my Aunt Martha needed a home. There were many reasons why we should take her in. What she and Mrs. Goldwin paid us for board would pay our house rent and leave us something over. Then, too, her dear mother would have a companion, and it was quite likely that the two of them would consent to take care of Lucy while we saw something of the world in the evening.

Helen didn't see it in that light, and for the first time I was obliged to gain my own way by domineering. But I thought that it was better to risk a break at this time than have one certainly later, for I am not one of those patient, forbearing men who will suffer my life and my wife's life to be spoiled by some one who had no business to spoil it.

Aunt Martha came. At first it appeared that the reason I had given for her coming showed my wisdom. Mrs. Goldwin took a great fancy to my aunt, and it seemed that the two old ladies would become very chummy.

I knew better.

At the second dinner we all had together I said, "Aunt Martha, what's news in the suffragist camp?"

Helen looked at me with wide open eyes. Evidently she saw my plan. She crouched as one waiting for a storm to burst.

"You don't mean," said Mrs. Goldwin, "that you are in favor of women voting?"

"I certainly am," replied Aunt Martha, setting her lower jaw.

"That certainly can't make any difference to you two," interposed Helen. "You don't have to discuss the suffrage question."

"Certainly not," I put in, well knowing that I had thrown a bomb between them with a fuse attached that would certainly bring about an explosion sooner or later.

The two ladies maintained for some time a discreet silence. Whether they would have continued to do so I don't know, but I do know that they would not if I could prevent. The next day at dinner I said:

"Aunt Martha, I see by the morning's paper a statement that in those states which have adopted woman's suffrage"—

"Charles!"

My wife looked a demand that I desist. I desisted. Having touched a match to the fuse, I waited for the explosion.

It came.

"I have seen those statements," said Mrs. Goldwin, "and they are conclusive."

"I, too, have seen them," said my aunt, "and they are absolutely false."

Fearing that my presence might dampen the argument, I left the table. The next day when I came home from business Helen told me that my aunt must leave. I took the ground that if either left it should be her mother.

There was a divided household, but not for long. I being for a compromise—that is, that both ladies should find other abodes—and in time secured it.

Helen and I are still living together in [illegible] comfort and [illegible] bliss.

Flimsy Gown of Tulle and Taffeta

Designed by Franklin Simon & Co., New York.

THIS quaint and exquisite gown is made of soft taffeta. Silver lace and tissue were never in more demand for fashioning evening gowns, and on this model they are used lavishly on both tunic and bodice. The tunic comes to a point in front and is finished with a deep band of tulle. The hem of this frock is also of tulle. The upper part of the bodice is silver embroidered net and the lower part is of taffeta. Bandings of silver spangles trim the tulle edges, and an apron of tulle adorned with silver banding mingles with the soft folds of the tunic.

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Seasonable Frock In Cloth.

A one-piece frock in "Regrets" colored broadcloth trimmed with narrow silk soutache braid and buttons.

It requires only 3⅛ yards of 54 inch face cloth to reproduce this stylish dress, which is in the new dark reddish purple shade called Regrets. The decorative scheme is simple, being confined to narrow stitchings of soutache braid and a collar of plain satin. The vest may be of silk, organdy or lace.

The back of the waist extends over the shoulders forming a yoke effect at the front. As are all fashionable colors, this one is in two styles so that it may be worn high or low. The skirt is a five-gore model with high waist-line and the back gore made to form a box pleat.

In cutting the material the back gore is laid along the fold of broadcloth, with the collar and back closely following. The front comes next, but is laid on a lengthwise thread; then comes the belt, laid crosswise of the material, on the fold. To the right of the belt is the shield, unless it is made of contrasting material, with the collar coming last and placed on the lengthwise fold.

The front and side gores are laid over a lengthwise thread, but along the selvage edge of the cloth. The sleeve and cuff are to the right of the side gore, and the sleeve is perforated for shorter length if desired. If the extension on the cuff is not wanted it can be cut off without spoiling the shape of the cuff in any way.

The front of the waist and the belt should be braided as soon as cut, but this requires only a little time.

A round neck-line can be given to the shield by cutting it out along line of single "oo" perforations, but the double "oo" perforations indicate a square neck-line.

The pockets are an attractive feature of the dress because they are novel both in shape and trimming.

In any other material than broadcloth this frock would be equally attractive.

A ROYAL ADVENTURESS

By EDITH O. ROSS

There is an episode in French history that is a perfect story. There is no need for the author to draw upon his imagination or to supply romance. Nor did it take place so long ago either, for it occurred during the reign of Charles X., that king of France who was deposed in 1830.

His predecessor on the throne, Louis XVIII., was childless, and upon his death his younger brother, Charles, succeeded him, Charles' son, the Duke de Berry, being heir apparent. The duke married an Italian princess, who bore him a son, the Count de Chambord. The Duke de Berry was assassinated, leaving the child count heir to the throne. At the revolution of 1830 Charles abdicated in favor of his little grandson.

The Duke of Orleans succeeded in having himself proclaimed king of the French, taking the title of Louis Philippe. Charles X. and his family went to England. Charles was not a man of much force and made no effort to recover the throne for his grandson. His daughter-in-law was made of very different stuff. When she discovered that the ex-king would make no move to recover the throne of France for her son, the little Count de Chambord, she determined to take the matter into her own hands. And here begins one of the most remarkable stories of adventure enacted by royal personages.

Leaving her son in England with his grandfather, the duchess set out to stir the Legitimist party to revolution for the purpose of recovering the throne for the child. Crossing the channel, she descended through the northern part of France, and, taking a position in a province where the people were loyal to her cause, she arranged for a rising. She was advised that the time was not favorable, but would not be dissuaded. The rising took place, but was a lamentable failure. The duchess, instead of endeavoring to secure her safety, pushed on southward by land, eluding those emissaries of the government sent out to arrest her. Her adventures, dressed as a man, on the journey alone make a thrilling chapter. She succeeded in reaching the Mediterranean and from the coast of France gained her former home, Naples.

She remained some time in Italy, but was not idle. Having arranged for a rising in favor of her son in Marseilles, she went there, her landing being the signal for the revolution. Again she was doomed to disappointment. The people did not turn out in sufficient numbers to serve the purpose. The duchess was advised to leave France, but again refused.

At Grenoble she found refuge in the house of an adherent and was kept in seclusion. She was betrayed by a man who had entered her service for that very purpose. He led a party of Orleanists to the house where she was concealed, but there was some mistake in giving the signal for her arrest, and the party withdrew. Meanwhile the duchess was warned, and when they returned she and several of her adherents had betaken themselves to a small space behind a fireplace that they had planned to enter in case of necessity.

A thorough search failed to reveal their hiding place. The party of searchers finally went away, leaving a guard in the room behind the fireplace of which the duchess and her friends were concealed. Unfortunately the night was cold, and the guard built a fire on the hearth. For two nights the concealed party suffered heat and suffocation, the duchess' dress catching fire, but on the second morning, starved and burned, they gave up the struggle and surrendered.

Great was the rejoicing of the usurper king at getting the troublesome woman into his power. He shut her up in a chateau and employed a general of the army to command the guard, but more especially to watch her with a view to learning some indiscretion which would cost her the sympathy of the French people. It was not long before word was sent to Paris that the prisoner had sinned in a way that would ruin her and render her an ineffective supporter of her son's claims to the throne. It was evident to the duchess that King Louis Philippe was employing watchers who were to make sure that the evidence against her should not be turned awry. Indeed, the poor woman was treated in a most contemptible manner.

Meanwhile the king was congratulating himself that the duchess who had given him so much trouble and uneasiness was in a position from which she would be unable to escape. He redoubled those who were to watch her, or, rather, redoubled their watchfulness.

One day the cry of a child was heard in the duchess' apartment. She announced that she had been secretly married at the time she had returned to Italy to an Italian nobleman, giving his name and title. Her enemies refused to believe the statement till she produced the record of her marriage, made by a bishop of the Roman Catholic church who had performed the ceremony.

However, by having married one not of royal blood she had placed herself in a position that rendered her unable to carry on her fight for her son's claim to the throne of France. She returned to her home in Italy, where she was [illegible] by her husband, and from then [illegible] the life of a private person.

BEAUTIFUL LINES.

Belted, Flared, Furred and Smocked Is This Suit.

MODISH TO A DEGREE.

Cut of tan broadcloth, edged with beaver and smocked at the belt and high collar, this fetching suit gives an ultra result. The apron front is apparently held by four self buttons and verges into military severity. The charming little close turban has a band of worsted roses in pastel shades with gold centers.

Would Help Him.

"I'll try to make you a good husband, my dear."

"And I have no doubt that you will succeed. Mother and I will abet your efforts in that direction vigorously."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE MODISH SKIRT.

All Correctly Put Up For Mornings in the House Is This Girl.

Blue and green plaid velvet features this skirt, which is belted with plain blue velvet, just as the pockets are outlined with the same material. The hip fullness extends around the back, and with the skirt is worn a modish blouse of flesh colored crepe de chine. Striped velvet, uncut corduroy and contrasting plaids are favorites for this model.

The following advertisements are reprinted with the thought that the messages they contain will prove particularly interesting during the Holiday Season. CHRISTMAS is a good time to start those in whom one is interested in the habit of Systematic Saving, which is the first step toward financial independence and character building; you can do this by presenting them with a savings account or one of the receipts issued by The Electric Co., which carry interest at 6% and when the partial payments are completed can be converted into perferred stock which is paying dividends at the rate of 7%.

When you give such a present, accompany it with the suggestion that the recipient SAVE FOR A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

The Electric Company has sold to investors all of its perferred stock. This offering is made possible because one of those interested in The Electric Co., is buying stock of shareholders who live at a distance at $105. per share for the $100. perferred stock, in order to re-sell it in Fulton at $100. per share and $10. per share. This is done because it is felt to be mutually advantageous that the customers and neighbors of the Company have an opportunity to buy its perferred stock.

Under these conditions, at the present time we are unable to promise stock enough to satisfy everybody. Preference will be given first to the smallest subscriptions, and we would rather sell $10. shares than $100. shares.

WE WISH ALL OUR NEIGHBORS THE COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.

The logical investment at this time is in public utilities. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fulton, First, Last and All the Time

What is everybody's business is usually nobody's business; but with us, what is everybody's business IS THE BUSINESS OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

* * *

Have you ever heard of FULTON MADE SPARKPLUGS? Why not use them in your automobile; they are good plugs and are MADE AT HOME.

No matter what your business, you must have people to do business with, AND THE GREATER THE AMOUNT OF PUBLIC SPIRIT AND CO-OPERATION AMONG THESE PEOPLE, THE GREATER WILL BE YOUR BUSINESS.

* * *

Business is largely a matter of sentiment, that is as far as the local conditions are concerned. Sentiment is a matter that must be created. Create the right kind of sentiment concerning your local institutions and the right kind of business will follow. STICK A PIN HERE SO THAT YOU WILL NOT FORGET IT.

* * *

Then again you need friends, entertainment, a church, library, a school for your children, if you have any; means of contact with the outside world. All this is simply another way of saying that you need the cooperation of other human beings in order to promote your own welfare.

* * *

The Chamber of Commerce is the LATEST, HIGHEST AND MOST EFFECTIVE DEVELOPMENT OF THIS CO-OPERATIVE PRINCIPLE.

* * *

As you maintain your life itself largely through the city in which you live, your prosperity is largely dependent on the city's welfare. You know of many ways in which this welfare could be promoted. A spirit of greater confidence in the city, willingness to work unselfishly for its best interest, and a love of progress among the citizenship would in themselves accomplish wonders. Faith and love precede work commercially as well as religiously. There is no monopoly of principles held by any set of individuals. The same rule applies to every walk in life.

* * *

These things in city building and [illegible] affairs can ONLY be brought about through the combined action—of a number of men—through a CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

* * *

The really great need for a Chamber of Commerce is NOT the opportunity it offers you to get MORE FROM the community. It is the chance it presents for giving more to it.

TRADE IN FULTON. BELIEVE IN FULTON. LIVE LIKE A FULTONIAN.

* * *

An advertisement in a paper printed in another city, paid for by a home merchant is a sign of EASY MARK.

* * *

What is the matter with FULTON? Nothing is the matter with FULTON, but what's the matter with YOU?

* * *

There is no to-morrow. DO IT NOW.

* * *

Make up your mind as you would make up your bed; so you can rest the easiest and find the greatest comfort.

* * *

Never mind what the world says; live up to your own conscience and let the world go to . . . .

MAYOR'S FAREWELL ADDRESS EVINCES GRATIFICATION

Mayor Fox's farewell address to the members of the Board of Aldermen and the reading of certain financial statements comprised last night's session, the last official meeting of the administration family.

Sadness because of the parting did not appear on the faces of the mayor, aldermen and City Attorney Fanning; in fact, there was an evidence of gladness, Alderman Gardner expressing himself thus "I am tickled to death it is all over with."

Mayor Fox in making his address, expressed deep appreciation of the efforts of the members of the Board to cooperate with him in administering the duties of his office. The mayor's address did not itemize the accomplishments of the retiring administration, except to point to the completion of the city's lighting system, [illegible] pieces of work in this [illegible] the mayor said in part:

"There are a few things I am sorry we have been unable to accomplish during our administration. One of these items, the repairing of the City Hall. The building is in abominable condition and something should be done to improve its condition. I am sorry that we have not been able to erect a detention hospital. Then there are the repairs to the pump house and higher pay for the employes at the pump house.

"Mr. Fanning, who has been city attorney during my administration, is to be complimented upon carrying out the duties of his office in so commendable a way. As a result of his efforts, the city has been kept out of litigation. This speaks well for the attorney, who attended practically every meeting of the board."

Mr. Fanning made an address in which he thanked the members of the board for their co-operation. He was followed by Dr. Hall and different members of the Board.

A communication signed by the City Attorney was read as follows: "I beg to advise that the Court in the case of Madison Dominick vs. the City of Fulton sustained the demurrer interposed by the City and has directed judgment dismissing the complaint with $97.15 against the plaintiff."

The financial report of the Board of Education was read as follows:

It is the desire of the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners to secure the adoption of a pension fund for the two departments, hence a resolution presented to the aldermen last night by Messrs. Stewart, White and Osborne.

In the fire pension fund the moneys will be levied from fines on members, rewards, fees and gifts, except as such may be retained by a particular officer; also all sales from condemned property of the department, all licenses for explosive materials, all fines and penalties under this act in the odinances of the city, one-fifth of the excise funds of the city and 2 per cent. per month of the salaries.

The police fund is scheduled to be made up in about the same manner, except that they will secure the fees from dog tag licenses.

Opinions

THE ABSURDITY OF IT

"Business sentiment," says a writer in the financial column of a New York paper, "seems to be crystallizing in favor of a permanent Tariff commission, composed of experts and free from political influence." Business sentiment, in that case, must be singularly guileless and lacking in common sense. The absurdity of a Tariff commission, "composed of experts and free from political influence" becomes apparent the moment one inquires where such a body would be found or how it would be created. Our government is a party government, and so long as it remains so its various agencies will be more or less under the political influences.—Rochesteer (N. Y.) Democrat-Chronicle.

AN OLD SNAKE IN A NEW SKIN

The administration's new shipping bill as outlined in a special despatch to the Herald from Washington yesterday is the old snake with a new skin.

All the objectionable features of the scheme are retained by which the government, with the waste of the people's money, would be put into the mercantile shipping business in competition with its own citizens.

It provides for a federal shipping board composed of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce, with three commissioners to be appointed by the President, and to be incorporated. This Board would be authorized to build or buy ships with a view to "transferring, chartering or leasing such vessels to corporations, firms or individuals."

The ten millions appropriated from the Treasury to start this scheme and the fifty millions to be raised by sale of bonds would not add appreciably to the country's tonnage—which, according to the Commissioner of Navigation's report, amounted on June 30 to 8,444,250 gross— even if the money were all expended in the building of new ships.

To the extent to which the money would be spent in the charter or lease of vessels it is obvious that the aggregate of existing tonnage would not be increased. On the other hand, if it were expended for construction the new vessels could not be completed in time to relieve the existing scarcity of ocean carriers and would probably be finished at a time when the release of craft now engaged in war service will make the supply superabundant.

The bill authorizes the Board to "investigate" all steamship lines, to "regulate their operation" and prescribe their charges. In short, upon the flimsiest of pretexts it is sought to add to the army of federal officials and create still another expensive, futile and vexatious government commission to squander public funds and interfere with the business of American citizens.—N. Y. Herald.

War Upon Pain!

Pain is a visitor to every home and usually it comes quite unexpectedly. But you are prepared for every emergency if you keep a small bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. It is the greatest pain killer ever discovered. Simply laid on the skin—no rubbing required—it drives the pain away. It is really wonderful.

Mervin H. Soister, Berkeley, Cal. writes: "Last Saturday, after tramping around the Panama Exposition with wet feet, I came home with my neck so stiff that I couldn't turn. I applied Sloan's Liniment freely and went to bed. To my surprise, next morning the stiffness had almost disappeared, four hours after the second application I was as good as new."

A HANDFUL OF PINE SEEDS

Once upon a time Fiona Macleod wrote, "A handful of pine seed will cover mountains with the green majesty of forest." Yesterday's issue of the Evening Times held on its first page a list of Fulton's loyal merchants. The list was not a long one, but coupled with each name was a distinct honor. It was the declaration of a principle, the expression of a belief in Fulton's institutions. Each name represented a merchant who has been about the business of doing right.

The business of doing right is an individual business, and each man, in every place, has to be about it without waiting for his neighbor. This is exactly what the little list published yesterday does stand for.

The individual adherance to a principle is the true saving grace in the world today. The belief in competition in the battle for supremacy over others must be reversed in thought before it can be reversed in experience. Men must cease to think that success or praise won by another detracts in any way from themselves. Every man in the grand scheme of things has his own niche, his own work. To be about the business of doing right is a natural occupation, and Fulton may have as a city all those things which are grand and fine, and big, just as soon as the awakening comes for its individual citizens.

OPEN ALL THE YEAR

The man whom we can rely on most is the man who makes frequent self-examinations of himself, not for the sake of pleasing the public, but for the one idea of being right.

The vulgar belief that wealth is the capacity mark of a man's worth is rapidly losing its caste. The belief that intellectual ability is a proof of greatness is another idol that few worship now. The brightest minds are often associated with the meanest moral characters.

This does not infer that a bright man is a crook, a wealthy man a knave, nor a poor man a saint.

The consciousness of honest purpose, founded on a just estimate of others, together with a willingness and an eagerness to do the right thing, is a little longer route to success, but it's the only wagon road open all the year.—The Silent Partner.

"KILKENNY" AT THE QUIRK TOMORROW NIGHT

"Kilkenny" is the title of Fiske O'Hara's new play in which he will be presented under the management of Augustus Pitou, Jr., at the Quirk the night of December 30. It is by Augustus Pitou, Sr., who has produced more Irish plays than any man in America, and to his credit be it said that in all of them there was not a single line of dialogue or of action that than offered the slightest offense to the patrons of the Irish drama. The son who has taken his father's place the past three seasons since Fiske O'Hara came under his management, has maintained the same policy of producing only the highest type of the refined wholesome Irish drama. In "Kilkenny" Fiske O'Hara will sing several new songs that have been especially written for the new play, including "Girl of My Heart," "Contrary Mary Clary," "Ireland is Ireland to Me," "Dear Mother Mine" and "That's What an Irishman Means." A cast of unusual excellence supports Mr. O'Hara, comprising Mabel Juline Scott, Marie Quinn, Mary Downs, Anna Nichols, Lisle Bloodgood, Eliza Mason, W. T. Morgan, J. P. Sullivan, James Edwards, Henry Duffy, J. E. Miller and W. T. Sheehan.

THE PEAVES FAMILY HELD REUNION CHRISTMAS DAY

A happy day was spent by Mr. and Charles Peaves at their Palermo home on Christmas Day, but no more so than by the guests. The events of the day and of former times, together with the usual merriment on such occasions kept alive the spirit of the festival. The guests were: Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Peaves of Syracuse, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Underwood of this city Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Seares and children, the Misses Mae and Marion of Mexico; Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Seares and sons, Stanley and Floyd of Sodus, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Seares of Philadelphia; Mr. Elmer Burton of Palermo; and the Misses Alice and Anna Stone of Colton, N. Y.

Late in the afternoon the entire party including the Misses Jessie and Maude Peaves, adjourned to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood 404 Cayuga st., where a dinner awaited them and a beautiful tree ready to be enjoyed.

EMPLOYERS HELP THRIFT; FIND EMPLOYES HONEST

BY EDWARD REYNOLDS
Treasurer of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company

Among the employes of large business concerns we find two classes that need consideration— the unfortunate and the improvident. All agree, I think, that the unfortunates are entitled to such consideration as can properly be extended to them, but there is quite a difference of opinion as to the advisability of an organized effort to aid the improvident.

In the majority of cases it has been our experience that it is the most expert craftsmen who are reckless with their earnings, and for this reason it is to the interest of employers to aid this class. By doing so they are able to retain them in the service and obtain the benefit of their skill.

The great problem is to find a way to handle the subject to the advantage of the employer and employe. From the experience we had during two and a half years I am satisfied that outside financial aid is not necessary or desirable; that the only effective means of combating the loan-shark business is for each large employer of labor, through savings and loan associations formed within the ranks of his own people, to provide for their needs in time of financial stress. We feel that we have worked the problem out successfully among our people in New York City, and we are now preparing to extend the

Our first move was to agitate the question of systematic saving among our employes. In carrying out our work we have found that many who never saved before have been induced to keep up their payments to our association, so that at this time they have an interest of over $200 each. In addition to this many who never gave any thought to the matter of saving before have been encouraged to make other savings through the purchase of shares in a building and loan society that caters particularly to those engaged in electrical pursuits, and in guaranteed stocks of other companies.

Our assoccìation has undertaken to handle without any compensation the money of those employes who desire outside investments, in order to see that they do not give up the attempt to save. In fifteen months we placed in outside investments nearly $50,000, coming entirely from those in our service, in addition to the amount deposited to their credit with our association.

We found that many who heretofore have been regarded as improvident and, in a sense, undeserving, are not so undeserving as they appeared. They are people who at one time or another became heavily indebted and were unable to extricate themselves. With our assistance they have done so, and upon the clearing of their debts have started in to save. There are many in this class who, when assisted in their difficulties and put upon their feet, remain there. We aim to help all such.

Our losses resulting from loans made to those who afterward left our employ have been negligible. We do not take any assignments of wages, but place all borrowers upon their honor, and I am glad to say that even those who have left our service, over whom we could no longer exercise control, have, with very few exceptions, paid the loans in full. The great rank and file of wage-earners are honest, notwithstanding the opionion of many to the contrary. We are no longer annoyed by having assignments of wages filed with us by loan companies, and we have not lost the services of valuable men because of the persecution of the loan sharks. We feel that the work pays. It is not altogether unselfish.

The only suggestion I have to offer is that great employers of labor organize associations similar to our own; that they join together in a league, or leagues, so that they may be able to cooperate with one another for mutual protection. I am thoroughly convinced that the work of these societies would be far-reaching, and would practically eliminate the business of the salary loan sharks.

The Mutual Investment Association of the employes of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company was organized February 1, 1909. It is a voluntary association and not incorporated. Its membership is limited to employes of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company and allied companies. The purpose of the association is to create and maintain by monthly contributions a fund to be invested in real estate, stocks, bonds, mortgages, or such other investments as may be selected, to be held for the mutual benefit of the members, in proportion to the amount contributed by each.

The management of the fund is in the hands of a finance committee of five members. No salary is attached to any office. There is no transfer of shares; dividends may be declared by a three-fourths vote of all the members at the annual meeting, or at a special meeting called for the purpose. Dividends, when declared, are not paid in cash, but are put to the credit of members. Thus continuous saving is encouraged. A regular payment of $5 per month entitles each member to one share. There is no limit to the value of a share. The present value is $235.

Loans are made to applicants on their personal notes. No other security is taken. Practically no losses have been incurred through bad loans. Money is loaned at 6 per cent per annum, and the borrower agrees to make his payments in weekly or monthly installments. A man borrowing $25, who wishes to pay back on a basis of $1 per week, is charged 5 cents interest—six months at 6 per cent per annum.

A unique feature of the association is the method by which it secures profit on merchandise. Frequently operators make loans for the purpose of buying typewriters, since evry operator must furnish his own machine. Accordingly the Mutual Investment Association sells typewriters on the installment plan, and thus the association makes ap rofit not only on the loan, but also on the sale of the typewriter.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condititon of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SURPRISE SPRUNG ON CRESCENTS

The Jogalongs, tailenders in the City League Bowling race, sprung a surprise which was not at all unexpected on the Crescents last night when they captured the first and third games of the three-game match bowled on the Onyx alleys. The Jogs won by a safe margin, too, each man bowling a consistent game throughout.

The entire Crescent team picked up in the second game while their opponents took a sudden slump, and combined with Van Buren's high individual score of 223, the Crescent's won this stanza without any trouble. Van Buren's high score was not equalled during the evening's sport, but Rathburn, a teammate, took honors for high total with 581 pins to his credit.

CLOSE GAME PREDICTED BY QUINTET'S FOLLOWERS

The Maccabee quintet will oppose the strong Mohawk team of Oswego on the basketball court at Church's hall tonight in what promises to be a closely contested game.

Through the unexpected good showing made against the Goosebones, who were defeated decisively last week by the local team, confidence is expressed in the ability to repeat the victory against the stronger Mohawk team which is made up of Jacks, Poucher, and Landers, the last named man being a member of the Oswego Normal team. When the local high school team played the Normals several weeks ago Landers was easily the star of theg ame, scoring a total of twelve baskets.

A preliminary game between the Holy Names and Bachelors will be started promptly at 8 o'clock. In the main event, the following men will probably lineup for the Maccabees; Forwards, O'Brien and Ives; center, Crockett; guards, Ward and Rohrball.

Alderman Gardner introduced a resolution authorizing the transfer of $219.28 from the Excise to the Police Fund.

The night captain of the police will be given an increase in salary of $8 a month and the captain of the Fire Department will likewise be affected to the amount of $6 additional monthly. The increase will become effective the first of the year. Alderman Foster nitroduced ther esolution authorizing the raise in salaries and the board unanimously offered ayes to the resolution.

The matter of Dr. Hall's tax delinquency vs. a claim of one hundred some odd dollars which the doctor had against the city again occupied the attention of the aldermen. After submitting data in support of his claims, the doctor brought each individual member of the board up short by saying:

"Do you know where the 1902, 1903 and 1904 cash books are? No, I suppose you don't." Alderman Foster asked Dr. Hall where they were and reply was, "I have been told in confidence where they are and I cannot betray the secret."

DR. SNEDEN FLAYS METHODS

Noted Educator Took Fling at Our Modern Ways in Education—Believes in Practical Training.

Yesterday at the gathering of teachers in Syracuse Dr. David Sneden, state commissioner of education, Massachusetts poked fun at our moder ways regarding education. Regarding the obligatory studies he made some highly critical remarks. He said,

"What is the good of teaching algebra? I'll admit there is, as we hear, a lot of 'mental gymnastics;' the intensified study of algebra, followed through four years of high school and later in college does produce a keener and quickened brain—for the further study of algebra."

Dr. Sneden also declared he had a very pronounced feeling of skepticism when it is asserted that the study of Latin is essential to a comprehensive understanding of our own English tongue. He went all thorugh the curricula of high schools as a surgeon would dissect a body, and pointed to what hec onsidered the strong and the weak spots.

Other excerpts from Dr. Sneden's lecture follow:

"Very many of our present offerings of so-called vocational education are only shams—but sufficiently good limitations of real vocational education to deceive the tax paying public," was another of the educator's thrusts at present-day conditions in high schools.

His conclusion was that "all education is tending to become scientific, as are now medicine, war, navigation, agriculture, metal working and the like.

"Efficiency of action in any field of applied science is possible only on the basis of clearly defined aims," he declared. "Right methods and sound testing of results are practicable only as consciously and specifically based upon clearly defined and carefully tested aims. Education must prove itself capable of developing in accordance with scientific standards and principles."

SAVINGS BANKS HOLD MILLIONS

State Superintendent Reports Increase for Year of $18,311,202—Wave of Economy.

Yesterday's New York Times contains the following:

A great wave of economy is sweeping over this country, and the wage-earners now, as never before, are impressed with the importance of saving. In this State this is reflected in a report of Superintendent Richards of the State Banking Department, and this, just made public, shows deposits for the fiscal year ended September 30 last of $1,791,542,601, a gain of $18,311,202. Increased opportunity for work has also been a contributing factor, but it has been downright thrift that has enabled a wage-earner to take perhaps the same wage as of a year ago, overcome the increased cost of living, and still increase the family rainy-day fund.

The number of savings banks in the State is 140, the same as the last fiscal year.

Contrary to a belief that seems to hold in many quarters, there has been no great year-end withdrawal of savings to send "the folks" abroad. Foreign bankers have noticed that among Italian and Greek depositors there has been such a withdrawal, but it is not more noticeable this year than in years past. An Italian banker summed up the situation when he said that many of those who earned and sent home money were now in the army, and those who remained and had money in savings banks were not going to pry loose from this country just at this time. Savings bank depositors who send money to the other side, it is said, have increased their monthly or quarterly money orders, another obstacle these had to overcome to increase their savings o n deposit here.

"The savings banks in New York have experienced an increase in the amount of money deposited with them in the year just ended." said J. J. Pulleyn, Controller of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, said to be the largest savings institution in the United States. "Of course," he added, "there is a natural increase, which if it did not come would be a source of worry. People since the war have had their minds turned to saving. A year ago the people were all told to economize. Affairs were uncertain. The beginning of the war saw business here pretty much demoralized, and labor suffered. Well, conditions did not become so very bad. Prices did not go sky high and business improved. Pay is better, though every one has not been benefited. It is true that those engaged in the manufacture of munitions made money, but the general benefit came mostly because of the demand for foodstuffs. With the increased demand for these commodities the farmers prospered. They got good prices for what they raised. This brought increased prosperity to them, and with constantly widening results. Some of this prosperity percolated through to the East."

Bank Has $150,000,000 on Deposit

Mr. Pulleyn said that he did not want to convey the idea that all this money found its way into savings banks, for it did not. He simply gave this as illustrating one of the reasons why deposits had increased. He said that the statement would show a total of $150,000,000 on deposit in his bank on January 1. The days when greatly increased savings will pour into savings banks and swell 1915 figures will be in the remaining few days before the new year. Christmas is disposed of and many will seek to put as much by in a few days that remain of the year as possible.

"Business as indicated by bank accounts," Mr. Pulleyn, "began to pick up in the early Summer. Opportunity for work increased and this is shown by the fact that one charitable organization which makes a specialty of feeding the poor did not have to make an appeal for a Thanksgiving dinner for the poor this year. It may have escaped the notice of some that the charity societies have not had to give much attention to caring for the poor this Winter. There seems to be a decrease in the number of those requiring charity and all this is another indication of the conditions that brought an increase in the amount of the State's savings. The 2,500,000 depositors in the banks of the State are the thrifty.

"I figured a year ago, taking into consideration the elements of population, that, allowing five persons to a family, there were 20,000,000 families in the United States and that half of these families would save money. That gives 10,000,000 deposits, each representing a family, and these deposits run from $100 to $1,000. In estimating the measure of prosperity [illegible] savings bank deposits [illegible] must not be lost sight of that these do not take into consideration the small dealers who are thrifty and prosperous, but who deposit with banks in which they can have a checking account."

Dillon, state commissioner of foods and markets.

On Thursday afternoon the state packing and grading law will be discussed. Charles S. Wilson, commissioner of agriculture, has been engaged to speak. I t is expected that the number of members who will hear Mr. Wilson's address will be large.

On Friday morning the business session will be devoted to a thorough consideration of the central packing house question and the details of the co-operative plant. F. S. Welch, of New York, agriculturist of the New York Central railroad, will be the first speaker. His subject will be "The Central Packing House." During thep ast summer Mr. Welch made a study of this subject in Canada. "How to Organize a Co-operative Association" will be the subject of the second address, by Marc Cole, of Albion. Dr. Frank Lattin, of Albion, will recount a season's experience and mistakes in running a co-operative plant. If time allows, opportunity will be given for discussion.

Possibly one of the most helpful features of the three days' program will be the grading and packing of apples according to the new state law. The officers of the association have arranged for fifteen or twenty barrels of apples, ungraded, for each day of the convention. The apples will be graded and packed in conformity with the new law. This working exhibit will do more, it is believed, to educate the fruit grower than many addresses and papers.

FIRM GETTING CLOSE TO EMPLOYES' PROBLEMS

A system of direct co-operation between employees and employers, understood to be the first of its kind in the clothing industry, has been inaugurated by the Michaels, Stern & Co's. Rochester's largest clothing manufacturers. As stated by Arthur L. Stern, an officer of the company, who has fostered the scheme, the system is not in the nature of welfare work, but is a business proposition on the part of both employer and employee.

Dr. Meyer Jacobstein, assistant professor of economics at the University of Rochester, has been engaged by the company to act as mediator in all differences arising between the company and its employees. Michaels, Stern & Company employ about 2,500 people, representing many nationalities. Differences are certain to develop, and rather than permit workers to brood over real or imaginary wrongs the firm has deemed it wise to give them an opportunity to be heard whenever they desire.

Michaels, Stern and Company is one of the largest clothing manufacturers in the United States. Its output averages about 12,000 garments a week. Nine thousand coats are to be made each week at the Child street factory. It finds business conditions improved in all parts of the United States.

Chronic Constipation

This disorder is [illegible] due to a torpid liver. All that is needed is a few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets to invigorate the liver. Mrs. Wm. H. Clark, Hannibal, N. Y., writes, "I was a victim of constipation, sick headache and poor digestion when I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets a year ago. I took two bottles of them and they strengthened my digestion, regulated my bowels and toned up my system generally."

Woman's World

DR. KATHARINE B. DAVIS.

The recent discussion occasioned by the refusal of a Chicago doctor to operate on a mentally defective baby because, in his judgment, an operation meant condemning the child to an imbecile's fate makes this symposium of interest to the mothers of our race:

Dr. Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction, New York.—If a child would be a helpless idiot, then what purpose would be served by keeping it alive? But it seems to me that no one physician should ever have the right to decide so momentous a question.

Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, New York clubwoman.—I think Dr. Haiselden has done a big humanitarian thing.

Judge Ben Lindsey, Denver Juvenile Court.—This case should give an impetus to the birth control movement.

Dr. Virgil P. Gibney, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University.—It is the duty of a doctor to relieve the sufferings of humanity and to prolong life regardless of what he individually may deem may be the outcome of such service.

Miss Florence Guernsey, Former President Federation of Women's Clubs.—I believe the Chicago physician was right if he was absolutely certain the child had such physical and mental defects as would make it a burden when it grew up.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Washington.—As a eugenist and a philanthropist I would let the child die. Perhaps as a parent I would have let it live.

Professor Franklin H. Giddings, Head of the Department of Sociology, Columbia University.—If the facts are as reported the child should be permitted to die. If more such children had been permitted to die there would be fewer molasses minded men and women in the community who object to letting such children die.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, Magazine Writer.—Few who have not had actual occasion to study the lot of large numbers of the feeble minded can conceive of the legacy of isolation, thoughtless ridicule and exploitation by the unscrupulous for vicious purposes which descends almost inevitably upon them the moment their natural protectors die or become unable to care for them, unless the community takes active and determined steps to protect them. The mere bitter facts that seven-eighths of our paupers, nine-tenths of our prostitutes and three-quarters of our criminals are feeble minded and that 90 per cent of all feeble minded girls become the mothers of illegitimate children before they are seventeen are a sufficient and convincing commentary upon the kind of influences which are likely to surround the lives of the feeble minded.

Dr. Max G. Schlapp, Director of the Clearing House For Mental Defectives, Postgraduate Hospital, New York, Psychiatrist to the Children's Court.—No physician has the right, on the strength of his own opinion, to sacrifice life or condemn a human being to death. At so early an age it is often difficult to make a diagnosis. Certain kinds of feeble mindedness, like cretinism, can be wonderfully helped.

BUSINESS OF A COMMUNITY.

Business must have a human basis, says Don E. Mowry in the Town Development Magazine. The grade of a business depends upon the grade of its human background. To build up the humanity of a community is therefore the surest way of building up the business of a community. We must analyze carefully the local needs, always taking into account in mapping out the program that undue emphasis must not be placed upon any special activity for any length of time. We must recognize two primary functions, those which are civic and those which are primarily commercial. If undue emphasis is placed upon the civic program the commercial interests will have just cause for complaint of the methods which the commercial organization—the central organization—is employing in the interests of the community in which every one is [illegible] and paying his part.

An Aspirant For Criminal Honors

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

The city of Naples is protected from the waters of the bay on which it is built by a sea wall. At the northern end of this wall is a landing to which a few boats are fastened. One day two men lounged on this landing. One of them said to the other:

"Luigi, how is it that you always have money to spend and yet you never work, while I am usually hunting for a job and can never get one unless it is unloading the ships at the docks on the other side of the city? And, I can assure you, that is very hard work and poor pay."

A knowing look came upon Luigi's face. "Only fools work, Giovanni," he said. "Wise men plan."

"I know what you mean," said Giovanni. "What you call wisdom is arranging to take one's share of the good things of the earth of which he has been unjustly deprived. That is all very well for you, for if you get caught you are not punished, while I—well, I would suffer the penalty."

"What do you mean by that?"

"You know very well that when you are tried your friends are in court. A witness is called to testify against you. You clasp your hands together over your breast dolorously. The witness knows that if he testifies against you he will be killed. How is all this arranged?"

"Do you really wish to become one of us?"

"I surely do."

"Well, I have my eye on a rich man who should by rights divide with me, I being poor. He is looking for a butler. Go to him and solicit the place. When you see a chance for a good haul make it, divide with me, and I will see, if you are arrested and tried for maintaining your right, that you are protected."

Giovanni accepted the proposition, went to one Signor Murelli and obtained the position of butler, to Luigi's surprise, with very little difficulty. Within a month he left Murelli's service with 1,000 lire, which he divided with Luigi. Giovanni was arrested and tried, but the witnesses against him were cowed, and he was acquitted.

One day soon after that he went to his friend Luigi and said: "I have heard that the police are on the track of the murderer of Francelli, who was done to death six months ago. They have laid a trap for him, and he will very likely walk into it."

"What trap?"

"As to that, if I give information I must be paid for it. I don't save a man's life for nothing."

Luigi tried in vain to get from Giovanni the method of procedure of the police to trap the murderer, but failed. Luigi, who knew who was the murderer, went to him and told him what he had heard. It was agreed that Giovanni should be paid 500 lire for the secret. Giovanni refused to deal with any one except the person most concerned, but consented to tell things to prove that on his information depended the safety of the criminal. This frightened the latter, and, knowing that Giovanni had robbed his master and had been protected from punishment by the society of criminals, he felt it would be safe to trust him. He therefore agreed to meet him and hear what he had to say.

When the two met Giovanni demanded his pay before giving the information. Criminals do not keep their money long, and the murderer, whose name was Andrea Cavelli, could raise only a part of the sum agreed upon. Giovanni accepted it on condition that Cavelli should give his note for the rest, stipulating what the payments were for. Cavelli balked at this for awhile, but when Giovanni reminded him that he himself was a criminal and had applied through Luigi for membership in the Society For Mutual Criminal Protection he consented and signed the note filled in as Giovanni desired.

The first installment having been paid Giovanni said the police knew that Cavelli was the murderer of Francelli, but had nothing except oral testimony against him, which would be frowned down at the trial by members of the Society For Mutual Protection. The government had therefore secured the services of a woman, who was to enthrall Cavelli and secure evidence that could not be suppressed by threats. All Cavelli had to do to keep himself safe was to beware of any woman who seemed disposed to favor him. But Giovanni declared that as soon as the police had found the proper person for the decoy he would know it and would communicate it to Cavelli.

The day after this arrangement had been made a party of the carabinieri arrested Cavelli, and the officer who commanded it was Giovanni.

He had been instructed by the government to track the murderer of Francelli and for the purpose had made the acquaintance of Luigi. The position of butler had been given him by Murelli with the understanding that he was of the carabinieri and that the robbery of his master was faked. In this way he gained the confidence of the criminals and succeeded in securing the written evidence needed to convict the murderer, for the note Cavelli had given him was held to be tantamount to a confession.

Cavelli was brought to trial, and a number of his friends were [illegible] expecting to terrify witnesses. They had no opportunity.

A Charming Senorita

Designed by J. M. Gidding, New York.

SPANISH fashion tendencies have been introduced for several months, especially in fancy dance frocks, and the gown here pictured also shows a little of the Spanish art. This tulle constructed model is an appropriate fashion for the slender woman. The main design of full skirt and tight fitting waist is still maintained and will continue in vogue for some time. The extremely wide skirt is trimmed with several bands of silver ribbon, and with this type of skirt is offered an oddly draped waist made basque style. The waist is of draped silk, which matches the bands on the skirt. The bodice is sleeveless and is held up by garlands of flowers.

The odd headdress of tulle is wound oriental fashion about the head and throat.

One Piece Apron and Cap For Little Housekeepers.

A design for a little house apron, with cap to match, fashioned of checked gingham.

Plaid gingham or percale should be used to make this attractive apron in which the growing girl may do the little duties which constitute her first lessons in housekeeping. The neck may be finished in high or square effect and the front, back and long sleeves are cut in one. If desired, however, the sleeves may be shortened.

Accompanying the apron is a cap which may be trimmed with a band of plain lawn or linen. In medium size the apron, without the cap, requires 2 yards 36 inch gingham. One-half yard extra gingham will be needed if the cap is used.

Only the cap and collar are laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods, for while the section containing the front, back and sleeve is laid near the fold, it is placed on a lengthwise thread. The piecing, the pocket and the sleeve band may be cut from the gingham which remains after the sides are sloped away. The lap is laid along the selvage edge.

For the short sleeve, cut off lower part of the sleeve on small "o" perforations, and for the round or square neck cut out neck edges about ⅜ of an inch above single "o" perforations. It is also provided that the outline of the neck may be V-shaped by cutting out the front ⅝ of an inch above the double small "oo" perforations.

For house wear and in warm weather these little aprons are unusually neat made of very light colored percale. There are many simple embroidery beadings and bands with which they may be finished about the necks and sleeves so that they answer all the purposes of a dress.

A Complication of Love and War

By ELINOR MARSH

My grandfather was graduated from college in 1859. At that time the plantation system in the south was attractive to northern young men, and he determined to go south as a tutor in some southern family. Events leading to the war between the states were coming on rapidly, and there was already much prejudice in the south against northerners. Nevertheless my grandfather, Gilbert Hastings, secured such a position as he desired in the state of Georgia in the family of Fitzhugh Griggs, who owned a large plantation worked by 800 negroes.

His duties were to prepare the elder son, Herbert, for college and teach the younger children in the elementary branches. There was a daughter two years older than Herbert, whose studies in literature young Hastings was expected to conduct.

It is strange that parents will permit the intimate association of a son or daughter with one whom they would not approve for a wife or husband, for a love affair is most likely to be the result. The present case was no exception to the rule.

However, no one was aware of it except the lovers. When both the south and the north were arrayed against each other by the firing on Fort Sumter my grandfather left for his home with the understanding that when peace came he would return and see what could be done in gaining Olivia's parents' consent to their union. But the outlook was not hopeful.

In the spring of '64, when General Sherman was making his march to the sea, my grandfather, who was a lieutenant in the invading army, passed near the plantation where a few years before he had been a tutor. Being familiar with the region and able to imitate the southern accent, he volunteered to disguise himself as a poor white countryman and go forth for information as to the location and numbers of the enemy's forces. He was recognized by one he had known during his residence there and turned over to the Confederate authorities, by whom he was tried and sentenced to be hanged as a spy.

As a last resource he sent to the plantation to learn if Fitzhugh Griggs was there and if he would not intercede for him. Griggs had commanded a Georgia regiment, had been wounded and was at home recovering from his wound. He declined to interfere to save Lieutenant Hastings until his wife and Olivia begged so hard that he should do so that he at last consented. Having great influence with the officers into whose hands the spy had fallen, his efforts were successful. Colonel Griggs not only succeeded in saving my grandfather's life, but in having him paroled to remain on the Griggs plantation till the end of the war.

The planter's children had received no instruction for several years. Herbert had recently entered the Confederate army, but the younger members of the family were growing up in ignorance. It was this that induced Colonel Griggs to suggest that Hastings be paroled on his plantation. He desired that he should resume his duties as teacher.

But this plan placed Lieutenant Hastings in an equivocal position. His life had been saved by Colonel Griggs, and his intimacy with the colonel's daughter was resumed, Griggs not dreaming that Olivia was in love with a northern soldier who had been condemned as a spy. Not only would it be dishonorable in Hastings to take advantage of his position to possess the girl he loved, but his sentence had been merely suspended, and at a word from Griggs he could be sent to the gallows.

The strain upon the lovers was very great. My grandfather, who was an honorable man, treated Olivia as if there had been nothing loverlike between them, and she, not realizing the cause of such treatment, made it very hard for him. During the balance of the war, though it was but a few months, he was subject to a terrible temptation. The more he endeavored to treat Olivia with apparent indifference the more difficult became his position. At last he said to her: "If your father knew of our relationship he would doubtless consider that I was acting a dishonorable part. My life is in his hands. We do not know but that he would send me back to the authorities to meet the doom of a spy."

This frightened Olivia to such an extent that she controlled herself, and no one on the plantation suspected that she and Lieutenant Hastings were lovers until they made the fact known themselves.

The war closed in April, leaving Colonel Griggs with a wrecked plantation and all the negroes freed by virtue of the emancipation proclamation. From a rich man he had been reduced to poverty. Hastings went north to find that his father early in the war had bought cotton at a low price and sold it at a price varying from $1 to $2 a pound. This had made him a rich man.

The ex-lieutenant returned to Georgia and made a formal application for the hand of Olivia. Since he was the sole heir to a fortune and the colonel was a pauper, the man who would have [illegible] a spy-in-law before now gave a willing consent. He [illegible] went north. I am one of their numerous grandchildren.

BEHOLD THE REDINGOTE.

Cut on Beautiful Lines This Suit Gives a Smart Effect.

A WINTER IDEAL.

Over a full skirt of deep purple broadcloth goes its redingote, which is modishly banded with black fox. Two interesting details are the slit pockets in the front skirt of the coat and the demi-belt fastened with two novelty buttons. With the chic little turban this makes a handsome outfit for the business woman.

The Great Eastern.

The dimensions of the one time world famous Great Eastern were as follows: Length, 692 feet; width, 83 feet; depth, 60 feet; tonnage, 24,000 tons; draft when unloaded, 20 feet; when loaded, 30 feet. She had paddle wheels fifty-six feet in diameter and was also provided with a four bladed screw propeller of twenty-four feet diameter. She had accommodations for 800 first class, 2,000 second class and 1,200 third class passengers, 4,000 in all. Her speed was about eighteen miles an hour. The Great Eastern was finally broken up for old iron in the year 1889 after a checkered career of some thirty-one years.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.

ITALIAN TOMATOES.—Remove thin slices from the stem end of six large hothouse or southern tomatoes and scoop out most of the pulp, then cook two-thirds of a cupful of macaroni, broken in small pieces, in boiling salted water until soft. Drain off the water and add the tomato pulp, drained of extra juice, and one-half cupful of grated cheese. Season highly with paprika and add salt to taste. Fill the tomato cases with the mixture, sprinkle tops with breadcrumbs, add a nut of butter to each and bake half an hour.

Fried Sweet Peppers.—Fried sweet peppers make an attractive garnish to serve with mutton chops, lamb chops, pork chops, ham or veal cutlet. Clean the peppers as usual, cut in three or four pieces and saute until tender and lightly browned, using butter or other fat enough to keep them from burning. If canned peppers are used drain carefully and allow them to stand until they have dried a little.

Stuffed Eggplant.—Wash and wipe a large eggplant and parboil it in boiling salted water for ten minutes. Let it get perfectly cold, cut in half lengthwise and scrape out the center, leaving the walls about three-quarters of an inch thick. Chop the pulp fine and add to it a small cupful of minced chicken, one-half cupful of minced ham, one-quarter cupful of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of melted butter, salt and pepper to taste. Mix well, add enough stock to make a stiff paste and fill with this. Bake, basting frequently with soup stock, for one hour. Serve with thickened gravy poured around.

Broiled Eggplant.—Peel and cut an eggplant in slices about a quarter of an inch thick. Over each slice rub a little olive oil and dust salt and pepper. Arrange them on a wire broiler and brown for three minutes on each side over a hot fire.
